INDIGESTION RIGHTLY CURED STAYS CURED

Not by Treating the Symptoms but by Toning up the Stomach to do Nature's Work

Indigestion should not be neglected, for by depriving the body of its proper nourishment it grows steadily worse. Neither stimulating medicines, which ruin the already weak stomach by making it work beyond its strength, should be used, nor predigested foods, which do not excite a flow of the digestive fluids, and by disuse cause the stomach to grow weaker. Nowhere is the tonic treatment with Dr. Williams' Pink Pills more clearly useful. Its principle is to enable the stomach to do its own work by building up the blood and giving tone to the nerves. When these are once more restored to their normal health indigestion disappears and the cure is permanent. In proof of these statements we give the experience of Mrs. Paul Gannon, Star City, Sask., who says: "For more than a year I suffered with all the terrible pains of indigestion, and my life was one of the greatest misery. It did not seem to make any difference whether I ate or not, the pains were always there, often accompanied by a severe bloating and a belching of wind. I did not even get relief at night, and sometimes hardly got a bit of sleep in my misery. I tried many remedies said to cure indigestion, but they did me not one particle of good and I fully expected that I would always be afflicted in this way. At this time my brother came home on a visit and he urged me to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and got six boxes for me. By the time I had taken four boxes I began to improve and could eat with some relish. I was greatly cheered, and continued taking the Pills until all traces of the trouble had disappeared and I could once more eat all kinds of food without the smallest inconvenience. We have since used Dr. Williams' Pink Pills in our family for other troubles. I am so firmly convinced of their virtue as a family medicine that I have no hesitation in recommending them to all weak, ailing people."

Sold by all medicine dealers or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50, from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

HOW IT STARTED.

"Prisoner," said the police court magistrate, "you are charged with creating a public disturbance."

"I deny it, sir," was the prompt reply.

"Well, what is your side of the story?"

"It was my birthday, sir, and I goes into a tavern as gentle as a kitten and says to the barman, says I:—

"Will you present me wid a glass of beer on this happy occasion?"

"I won't," says he.

"For whv?" says I.

"Because I'm not in the pre-empting business," says he.

"You are cold-hearted," says I.

"Yah," says he.

"And an anarchist," says I.

"G'wan," says he.

FORTUNE FAVORS THE BRAVE; OR, A LOOK INTO THE PAST

CHAPTER XV.—(Cont'd)

A sentiment which poor Nancy herself most heartily endorsed. She had only ventured on one remonstrance to Dorothy, but as she saw that the girl had a strong wish that things should be as she had planned she gave way, sacrificing her own feelings and inclinations so that she might not add another disappointment for Dorothy to bear; it was sufficient pain to see the change that had come on the girl who had given her more than a sister's love, and to know that it was she, and she alone, who had brought that change. There was an end to all the dear little cozy chats and confidences now, an end to all.

But in all her pain and misery Nancy did not forget a single thing that might perchance give pleasure to Dorothy, and so she made no further protest to the mockery of wedding festivities when she saw the girl had some strong wish in the opposite direction to her own. To Sir Humphrey, Nancy rarely spoke now; she could not bear to read the surprise and disappointment on his kind face, and know that he like all the rest, regarded her as worldly, ungrateful and contemptible.

"My wedding day!" murmured Nancy, as she staggered to her feet when the first bright touch of dawn crept into the sky, "the day that should have been the most beautiful of my life, and is the most terrible!"

She was faint and weak with long sitting; her limbs trembled beneath her weight; she half-faltered and fell. With great difficulty she made her way to the bed, groping for it like a blind creature; and, reaching it, she stumbled on to it, and immediately lost consciousness.

It might have been a swoon or only a deep, exhausted sleep that overcame her. Nancy never knew; but she remained like a log through the early morning hours, and never moved till a voice sounded in her ears and some one brushed back the heavy masses of hair from her hot brow.

It was Baines.

"Miss Nancy—come, Miss Nancy—rouse yourself, my dear. I have brought you a cup of coffee; it will do you more good than tea, miss. It's me—Miss Baines; don't look so frightened, my dear."

"Poor lamb—poor lamb!" was the hurried thought in the kind-hearted woman's breast, as she raised the girl tenderly and tried to make her comfortable. She was grieved and alarmed at Nancy's bloodless face and weakness; she had thought there was some trouble, but she did not guess it was so bad as this. It was no ordinary trouble that had left its traces on that bright young face.

"What—what time is it, Baines?" Nancy whispered, as she rested her a parting glance at the girl, lying with white, set face, her breath coming in short, panting sobs from her overlaid breast, she went quietly out of the room and sought Dorothy.

She found Miss Leicester out of bed, standing staring over the sunlit garden, with a sad, depressed look on her lovely countenance.

"Have you been in to Miss Hamilton yet, Baines?" she asked, waking with a start from her thoughts.

Baines hesitated; she longed to speak of what she had just seen, to have told Dorothy of the evident mental agony poor Nancy was enduring, but something restrained her, she scarcely knew what, save that she felt Nancy wished to keep her sorrow hidden, and from her girl friend more especially.

"I have been in, but I think I won't disturb her just yet, Miss Dorothy."

Dorothy glanced at the woman; her quick perception saw at once that all was not well with Nancy; and again that curious sensation which had visited her so often during the last few weeks, that Nancy was sacrificing herself for some mysterious reason, came over her.

She made a movement as if to run toward Nancy's room, and then she stopped.

"Do you think Miss Hamilton can see me, Baines?" she asked, hurriedly.

"Well, Miss Dorothy, I am sure she will see you, but"—Baines was busy unfolding the delicate cream-silk bridesmaid's dress destined for Dorothy's wear, and her face was hidden—"I think, miss, she will be better left alone."

"Baines," Dorothy checked herself; she stood lost in deep reflection; and while Baines wondered to herself when she should best broach the subject of her going with Nancy, and if her young mistress would be annoyed at the request, Dorothy's voice broke in on her musing, and, by some strange coincidence, she spoke on this very subject.

"Baines," she said, slowly, "I think I should like you to accompany Miss Hamilton as maid; she knows you, and trusts you, and—and I should be happier knowing you were with her; what do you say, Baines?"

And then Baines explained that she had come there on purpose to ask this very thing, and that if Miss Dorothy did not mind, she would like to go with Thomas Crawshaw's young wife when she left the Hall that day.

Dorothy's clear gray eyes met the maid's honest ones, and, though neither spoke, there was the same thought in the mind of each—that by doing this they would feel that Nancy had some protection and comfort in her forthcoming detestable marriage.

"See that your box is packed at

of all save that they loved one another, and that the hour of their parting was at hand, a parting fraught with bitter pain.

"Dorothy, darling! you—you will think kindly of me!—you will forgive me—"

Nancy could get no farther; the words died away in a sob.

"Forgive! It is I who ask forgiveness of you. Oh, Nancy! how wicked, how blind, you must have thought me! I see now how I have misjudged you. Something terrible has happened! That man has got you in his power! Why did I not know that before! But it is not too late, Nancy—it is not too late, dear!"

Nancy clung to the slender form. Alas! she could not echo the hope that filled Dorothy's last words.

"Yes," she breathed, rather than spoke, "it is too late. Dorothy, you mustn't ask me any more; my lips are sealed. I—I never meant to let you see my misery; but when you came near me with your dear, dear arms, I could not help myself. Dorothy, my best my truest friend, may God bless you, and keep you always. Pray for me, Dorothy, for I shall need your prayers, I feel—I know. Kiss me, dearest, and go—go, or I—I shall break down, and I must not do that—I must not do that!"

She drew herself forcibly from Dorothy's hold, and almost pushed the girl from the room in her agitation and eagerness.

For one instant Dorothy resisted, then she caught a glimpse of Nancy's white, agonized face; and she knew that, struggle as she might, the fiat had come forth, and was irrevocable, and that to argue or urge her now would but be to strengthen her difficulty a hundred-fold.

Ripstone village had plenty of gossip and chat about the grand wedding up at the Hall, and many were the words of admiration lavished on the bride and her beauty; while Miss Dorothy came in for her share too, though it was generally allowed that she did not look so well as usual, and that her eyes seemed as if they had been weary with much crying.

The local reporters wrote long, flowing accounts of the affair, and eulogized everything and everybody, and a stranger and onlooker would have imagined no two happier people existed in the whole world than Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Moss Crawshaw, the hero and heroine of the day.

A short but ample notice of the wedding appeared in the more fashionable of the daily newspapers, and thus it was that Derrick Darnley, standing on the deck of a Cunarder as it steamed out of the Mersey on its way to New York, read the end of his brief romance.

He had lingered on in England, hidden from his old friends and old haunts, ever since that night when the light and joy of life had been suddenly darkened for him—lingered, urged by a conflicting tide of hope and desperation; but now the struggle was over, and Nancy was gone from him for ever, he had determined to put the ocean between himself and his native country, for a time, at least.

"May she suffer some day as she has made me suffer," he muttered, bitterly, as he flung the newspaper on the polished deck and trod it under foot. "I will tear her memory out of my heart! I will be

 "Five dollars or fourteen days."

JONES' NIGHT OUT.

Jones "dined out" with an old acquaintance the other evening.
 "Don't wait up for me, dear,"
 he said to his wife. "I may be rather late, but it can't be helped."
 At breakfast next morning he was stonily silent, so was the breakfast-room clock.
 "Maria, dear, there must be something wrong with the clock. I am sure I wound it up last night," he ventured at last.
 "No," answered his wife. "You wound up Freddy's musical-box instead, and it played 'Home, Sweet Home' till three in the morning, and the hall clock has stopped."

OBVIOUSLY.

"Look! The pompous gentleman at the other table has tucked his napkin under his chin without attracting attention."
 "He must be rich."
 "And he is eating peas with his knife."
 "Gracious, he must be wealthy."
 "And he's stirring his coffee with his fork."
 "Great Jupiter, he must be a millionaire."
 "And he hasn't tipped the waiter."
 "Ah, I said he was a millionaire!"
 He was.

THE ONLY MEDICINE FOR THE BABY

The only medicine a mother should give her little ones is one she can give and feel absolutely safe that not the slightest harm will result—a medicine that is guaranteed strictly free from injurious drugs. Such a medicine is Baby's Own Tablets—every box is sold under such a guarantee, and the mother may feel perfectly safe in giving them to even the new-born babe. Concerning them Mrs. Albert E. Wood, London, Ont., says:
 "I have found Baby's Own Tablets all that is claimed for them. My baby has had them from birth and will take them eagerly. I am sure there is no better medicine for little ones." The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

"It is easier to be good than great," remarked the moralizer.
 "Yes," rejoined the demoralizer,
 "one has less opposition."

had thought there was some trouble, but she did not guess it was so bad as this. It was no ordinary trouble that had left its traces on that bright young face.
 "What—what time is it, Baines?"
 Nancy whispered, as she rested her head against the motherly shoulder.
 "Is—is it time?"
 "To dress, miss! No, it's only just gone eight; but I had an idea you might like some coffee, miss, and so I brought it early. You've just time for an hour or so's quiet rest, if you want to take it. There, let me undress you, miss; you don't get no proper rest with your clothes on."
 "Baines!"—Nancy put her small, hot hand on to the woman's—
 "Baines, don't—don't tell!"
 Baines understood her plainly;
 she did not wish Dorothy to know
 she had not been to bed all night.
 "Lor' bless you, miss; in course not; not one shan't know nothin'.
 There, my dear, now lie still; drink up the coffee and shut your eyes, we mustn't have you a-faintin', must we?"
 "I shan't faint," Nancy said, in weak, weary tones, as she obeyed the maid; then she put out both her hands, "Thank you, Baines; you are very—very good to me. I—I am grateful to you."
 Tears sprang to the woman's eyes.
 "Don't talk like that, Miss Nancy, don't!" she said hurriedly. "I'm not doing anything at all; it's a great pleasure to serve you, Miss Nancy, that it is. I only wish as how you was goin' to stay, miss."
 Nancy turned her wan face toward the woman.
 "Oh, Baines!" she said, eagerly,
 "if—if you could only come with me, I—!" She forgot herself for one moment.
 "Then I'll come, miss; yes, that I will. Now, don't you fret, miss I'll do it."
 "But Miss Dorothy," Nancy began, feebly.
 "There's Sarah, miss; she's Miss Dorothy's old nurse, and she have done far more for her nor I have ever done. Miss Dorothy will only be too glad to send me with you;
 she loves you so much, miss."
 Nancy clung to the maid's roughened hand and burst into tears.
 "Oh, Baines!—dear Baines!" she moaned.
 No other complaint passed her lips, but Baines knew as well as if she had told her in words that the young girl's heart was broken.
 "Don't—don't, miss," she said,
 tears stealing down her own cheeks unconsciously. "It ain't for me to inquire into your trouble, Miss Nancy; but I ain't so blind I can't see you've got a grief; but only put your trust in me, miss—I won't fail you, and I'll do all in my power to comfort you and help you, miss.
 Now rest back and lie still. See,
 I will darken your blind; you don't need to think of dressing for another two hours—you don't take long."
 Baines stole about softly, arranging and preparing everything as quietly as possible.
 "You don't tell me she's marrying him for his money; there's something behind all this, or my name ain't Esther Baines," she muttered to herself; and then, with neither spoke, there was the same thought in the mind of each—that by doing this they would feel that Nancy had some protection and comfort in her forthcoming detestable marriage.

 "See that your box is packed at once, Baines, and tell Mrs. Craven to pay that Frenchwoman who came down las. night a month's wages, and let her go," said Dorothy quickly; and when she was once more alone she stood and gave way to her thoughts again.
 The whole affair was a gigantic mystery to Dorothy—one that seemed impossible of being unravelled.
 She had credited Nancy, against her every wish and inclination, with being mercenary, wanting in affection and gratitude; and certainly Nancy's very cold and constrained manner, which had been so marked ever since the engagement was publicly pronounced, had gone far to force these unpleasant thoughts into actual truths. But as she stood alone on the very morning that was to see Nancy made a wife, Dorothy Leicester could not rid her mind of the feeling that she had terribly misjudged her girl friend, and almost sister, and that instead of condemning, she should be consoling—offering pity, not congratulations.
 "Whatever it is, it is too late to change things now," she said to herself. "The die is cast, and Nancy must be that man's wife.
 May God help her, for she will be a miserable woman. With all his wealth, all his treasures, he is nothing more or less than a brute, without a mind, a brain or a heart.
 Well, if ever she should need a friend, she will find one in me.
 Poor Nancy! I—I did not think to lose her like this! She has been very dear to me, and she will be dear to me to the end."
 Then Dorothy dashed away her fast-falling tears, rang her bell for Sarah, her old nurse, and began her task of beautifying herself for the occasion.
 She had constituted herself sole bridesmaid; and though her whole spirit mudied and rebelled against the marriage, she was determined to give her friend everything she herself would have when her wedding day arrived.
 To please her, and out of compliment to Nancy, whom he sincerely liked, the Earl of Merefield offered his services to Mr. Crawshaw as best man; and the Hall was full of guests.
 It was on the stroke of eleven when Dorothy at last ventured into Nancy's room.
 The girl was standing erect and alone, with her bridal train sweeping the ground and her bridal veil shading her rich russet tresses and sweet, white face.
 Dorothy waited a moment at the door. Nancy had not heard her come in, and there was a look on that still, set countenance which sent a pang to the other's warm, generous heart.
 "Is there anything I can do for you?" she began, in a low, hurried voice; then, as their eyes met, she ran forward, with her hands outstretched. "Oh, Nancy! Nancy dear!" she cried, brokenly. "Come to my arms, Nancy, and kiss me!"
 With a broken sob, Nancy turned,
 clasped the two small hands,
 and the next moment the two girls were clinging to one another, heedless of their rich finery, heedless;

himself and his native country, for a time, at least.
 "May she suffer some day as she has made me suffer," he muttered, bitterly, as he hung the newspaper on the polished deck and trod it under foot. "I will tear her memory out of my heart! I will be strong and forget her, for she is not worthy to be remembered!"

ZAM-BUK HEALED BABY'S SORES.

Mrs. C. Pardy, of 479 Seigneurs St., Montreal, writes:—"I cannot tell you how thankful I am for the cure Zam-Buk has worked in the case of my baby son. He was troubled with scalp disease and I tried everything I could think of, but in vain. Finally I tried Zam-Buk. I could see an improvement after two applications! After persevering with the Zam-Buk treatment he is now completely cured. Zam-Buk is certainly a wonderful balm, and I shall always keep it on hand."
 Mothers should use Zam-Buk for all children's skin sores, ringworm, scalp sores, cuts, chafings, bruises, etc., because of its great purity. Also cures piles, eczema, bad leg, varicose sores, etc. 50c. box, all druggists and stores.
 Zam-Buk Soap, 25c. tablet, is best for baby's bath and for delicate skins.
 Mother Graves' Worm Exterminator will drive worms from the system without injury to the child, because its action, while fully effective, is mild.
 Warts are unsightly blemishes, and corns are painful growths.
 Holloway's Corn Cure will remove them.
 "Six feet in his boots!" exclam-ed old Mr. Flatiron, who was reading about a man's height. "Nonsense! Why, they might as well tell me that the man has six heads in his hat."
 NOT A CONTORTIONIST.
 A certain merchant died, leaving to his only son the conduct of his extensive business, and great doubt was expressed in some quarters whether the young man possessed the ability to carry out the father's policies.
 "Well," said one kindly-disposed friend, "for my part I think Henry is very bright and capable. I'm sure he will succeed."
 "Perhaps you're right," said another friend. "Henry is undoubtedly a clever fellow, but, take it from me, old man, he hasn't got the head to fill his father's shoes."

ONE MORE OF THE PIONEER WOMEN

TELLS HER SUFFERING SISTERS TO FIND RELIEF IN DODD'S KIDNEY PILLS.

Mrs. Forrester had Rheumatism and other Kidney Diseases for two years, but Dodd's Kidney Pills made her well.

Dinsmore, Sask., May 22 (Special)—One more of the pioneer women of Saskatchewan, relieved of pain and suffering by Dodd's Kidney Pills, has given her statement for publication in order that other suffering women may profit by her experience. This time it is Mrs. John Forrester, well known and highly respected in this neighborhood.

"My trouble started from a severe cold," Mrs. Forrester states. "My sleep was broken and unrefreshing. I perspired freely at the slightest exertion. I had pains in my back and Rheumatism developed, from which I suffered for two years.

"I do not need to tell you that I was far from being a well woman when I started to use Dodd's Kidney Pills. But now I am thankful to say my troubles are gone. I recommend all suffering women to use Dodd's Kidney Pills."

Suffering women can learn from the experience of others that the one sure way to health is to cure their kidneys, and Dodd's Kidney Pills always cure the Kidneys.

HOGBACK TOMBSTONES.

Only a Few in England and Decorators Disagree About Meaning.

What is a hogback tombstone? Ninety-nine out of every hundred people, on being asked this question would jump to the conclusion that the answer is a very simple one and reply, "Why, a tombstone shaped like a hog's back, of course."

So far so good, says the Wide World. If one demands more ample particulars, however, even the learned are placed in a dilemma, for the hog back tombstones, which number but half a dozen or so in the whole of England, constitute one of the mysteries which archaeologists are ever attempting to solve.

More thought perhaps has been expended on the hog back at Heysham, for instance, than on any other one tombstone in Christendom; and the problem involved is by no means elucidated. J. Holme Nicholson, president of the historical section of the Archaeological Institute, thinks that the basso-relievo sculpture "on this singular tombstone, which was unearthed in the Heysham churchyard near Morecambe some eighty or ninety years ago, refers to Scandinavian legends.

Basing his judgment on the researches of Mr. Calverley and Dr. Colley-March, the rude carving represents the Crack of Doom—the Scandinavian Ragnarok. The Powers of Evil have been let loose; war is raging between these and ity having his morning meal. Occasionally the chick would raise his head and appear to beg his mother for an extra tit-bit, but this was refused him with gentle firmness.

"Hour after hour the eagle stood motionless over her young with a look of tender mother-love in her eyes, quite unlike the usual fierce expression associated with the king of birds. The sky shortly after two o'clock had become quite free of clouds, and the air became extremely cold, the touch of frost in the air being by no means conducive to our comfort.

"Almost exactly at four o'clock the sun rose in the northeast. He came over the brow of a hill looking red and angry, and for the space of fifteen minutes lit up the glen with a rich red light. The brooding eagle looked particularly beautiful in this light, being transformed for the while to a ruby-red bird of prey, and the young bird also being faintly tinged with pink. The sun reddened the snow-fields on the crater-shaped Cairntoul with charming effect; but his reign was all too short, for ominous clouds, hurrying up from the west, soon hid him from our sight. The weather had now completely changed, and soon the Cairngorm was shut in by the gathering mist.

"I had intended to secure a photograph of the eagle leaving her aerie, but the feeble light effectually put a stop to all efforts in the photographic line, and shortly before six o'clock the eagle slipped noiselessly off the nest and disappeared from sight, having in all probability set out on a foraging expedition."

REST AND HEALTH TO MOTHER AND CHILD.

"Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup has been used for over SIXTY YEARS by MILLIONS of MOTHERS for their CHILDREN WHILE TEething, with PERFECT SUCCESS. IT SOOTHES the CHILD, SOFTENS the GUMS, ALLAYS all PAIN; CURES WIND COLIC, and is the best remedy for DIARRHOEA. It is absolutely harmless. Be sure and ask for 'Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup,' and take no other kind. Twenty-five cents a bottle."

"Has your father ever given you any idea what he thinks of me?" "No. I really don't believe father thinks of you at all. He has so many important things to fill his mind."

The Oil for the Athlete.—In rubbing down, the athlete can find nothing finer than Dr. Thomas' Electric Oil. It renders the muscles and sinews pliable, takes the soreness out of them and strengthens them for strains that may be put upon them. It stands pre-eminent for this purpose, and athletes who for years have been using it can testify to its value as a lubricant.

Colley-March, the rude carving represents the Crack of Doom—the Scandinavian Ragnarock. The Powers of Evil have been let loose; war is raging between these and the gods, and Whorl, the great serpent who lives at the bottom of the sea and is the cause of all the tempests which the world experiences, has broken loose.

Another ecientist holds that the figures represent an animal hunt, probably owing to the fact that one of the sculptured beasts is a stag. One learned gentleman imagined that he had found a clue to the meaning of the carvings in the legends of the saints in the apocryphal Gospels. The stone represented the despatch of Seth to get oil of grace for Adam when he was lying on his deathbed.

"But on hearing this a fourth savant stated that in his opinion religion had nothing whatever to do with it—the tomb was merely that on an ancient huntsman, as the hounds' heads at the ends clearly showed."

TONGUES HARD TO MASTER.

One of the difficulties of learning the Samoan language is that each noble has a private dialect of his own, but the difficulty is matched by a linguistic complication to certain other parts of Polynesia. Among themselves it is taboo. And the men do not trouble their heads about the other.

Watching the King of Birds During Early Morning Hours.

Writing of his experience in the London Daily Mail, a student of birds says: "We had crossed the bog and had taken a short nap. The aerie was now faintly visible, and an indistinct white object seemed to suggest the possibility of an eaglet, but the light was as yet too indistinct to make out any object with certainty. Shortly before three the chaffinches burst into song, and we now perceived, to our intense satisfaction, the golden eagle standing on the edge of the nest and guarding a solitary chick.

"It is a noteworthy and curious fact that some eighty per cent. of eagles lose one of their young during the first three weeks of its existence. Numerous explanations have been advanced to account for this, but they are all most unsatisfactory.

"The eagle was standing over her young with wings slightly raised, and the chick seemed quite contented with his head alone sheltered by his mother. Before the light had become clear confused movements were noted in the aerie, and the youngster was in all probability

Compounded only of vegetable substances the curative qualities of which were fully tested, they afford relief without chance of injury.

THE FRENCHMAN'S "CASTLE"

Another World Is the Boulevardier's Household.

Little by little the old superficial judgments are passing away, in this age of better acquaintance and of larger sympathy among nations. Laurence Jerrold, himself an Englishman,—an inhabitant of "the land of homes,"—in "The Real France," pays tribute to the home life of Paris.

Only in Paris life sparkles like this, free from extinguishing cares, responsibilities, conventions, prejudices and commonplaces; it dazzles for months, then the amazing discovery begins—the finding of a solid Paris, a Paris of the old earth, with roots in deep custom, a Paris of rock-like consistency and iron faithfulness, a simple, straight, ordered, long-headed, and earnest Paris.

Cross some boulevardier's real threshold,—but it often takes years to pass them,—and the boulevard world disappears. This is another world.

Let us make the wild supposition that the foreigner, after six months, has crossed the boulevardier's threshold,—it would really take him ten years to do it,—and imagine his amazement.

He is now immeasurably miles from the boulevards. He is in a tiny castle, battlemented and guarded against boulevardism. The daily scandals of journalism, the hourly intrigues of politicians, the machinations of actors and critics, the frantic jealousies and elbowings of the men of letters who are getting on—that is what he called Parisian life.

In the tiny castle, papa, who is a famous journalist outdoors, lifts gently the curtain of the cot where the little crumple-faced, black-haired baby sleeps, and looks with a great tenderness and without a shadow of the Englishman's mauve honte.

Parisianism sweeps round that tiny castle in furious gusts, but only a few filtered breaths of it are ever let in. Moralizing playwrights are perpetually discovering that the father and mother and the child are a sacred trinity. The foreigner who was trying to be "Parisian" in boulevard cafes finds across the boulevardier's threshold no more subtlety and complication than that.

It is the Frenchman's flat that is his tiny castle, and will remain the last refuge of simplicity in a complicated world.

Maud—"How pretty and careless Mabel's hair always looks." Gertie—"Yes, and it takes her two hours to make it look that way."

Doctor—"You have some sort of poison in your system." Patient—"Shouldn't wonder; what was in the stuff you gave me?"

RADIUM THE ELIXIR OF LIFE

ITS INJECTION SHOWS REMARKABLE RESULTS.

French Scientists Are Experimenting on Horses With View to Securing Serum.

From the French veterinary school at Alfort comes the announcement that recent experiments with injections of radium into the veins of old horses have led the professors in charge to believe that this wonderful element is to become the basis of a real elixir of life. An old horse into whose jugular vein were injected four milligrams of radium on two occasions immediately began to show signs of rejuvenation.

The animal became frisky, took on flesh and was easily mistaken for a still young and valuable animal. Analysis of the blood showed an increased proportion of strong red globules. The whole animal, says Prof. Gabriel Petit, who conducted the experiments, showed a surprising radio-activity, and the blood revealed the presence of considerable sulphate of radium.

Without making or hinting of rash promises the French scientists who have been largely instrumental in the development of the now highly effective anti-toxic serums, announced their purposes in experimenting with the horses. The action of radium on the animals was first to be observed, and, if found beneficial in revitalizing and rebuilding tissues, the professors were slowly to inoculate the horse with the mysterious new element until a radio-active serum might be drawn from its blood.

REVIVES OLD DREAM.

Such a serum could be administered to the human being, as are the common smallpox and diphtheria vaccines to-day, in the hope that tissue might be softened and revitalized and the blood vessels held back from the stiffening process which comes on with advancing age and finally ends in senility and death. There is nothing extravagant in these hopes. Fully they have not been realized, but already it has been demonstrated that direct injections of radium will rejuvenate a horse, and that the injections can be made, leaving a trace of the vital drug in the blood from which the serum must be had.

In other words (nearer to the concrete expression desirable in a matter of so transcendent interest to man), radium, which has already upset half the notions of chemistry and led the most advanced of scientists to believe that the age old dream of the transmutation of baser metals into gold may yet be fulfilled, is now likely to be held the principle of an elixir of life, the true fount of perpetual youth.

If, in the end, this is found to be true, the search of every age in history will have been crowned with success; the dreams of the Egyptian priests, the Grecian adventures, the alchemists of the middle ages will have reached consummation—fruition—and man will have "attained the glorious state in which we may kiss and quaff the golden draught."

In the middle ages and the renaissance period the work of the alchemists reached its height, and it continued to flourish independently or as a side branch of chemistry until within the last hundred years.

For centuries there was the delusion that the so-called philosopher's stone held the secret of perpetual youth, as well as the power of transmuting the baser metals into gold and silver. The precipitate or sublimate of this strange, mythical substance, in its full strength, was supposed to transmute metals, and, in weaker doses and infusions, to restore youth.

THOUGHT GOLD THE ELIXIR.

But there were many other theories of which the more persistent are still of interest. Gebir and Roger Bacon believed that the secret of the elixir of life lay in aqua regia, a dreamed of liquid capable of dissolving all substances, especially gold. The aqua regia of today is, of course, a mixture of nitric and hydrochloric acid, and it does dissolve the purest gold, but it was unknown to the alchemist. Both Gebir and Bacon held that potable gold—that is to say, gold reduced to drinkable form—was the elixir of life, and centuries were devoted by these alchemists and their followers to efforts for the dissolving of the yellow metal.

Roger Bacon called the attention of Pope Nicholas IV. to the story that an old man plowing in Sicily had found a small phial containing a yellow liquid. Thinking the substance dew, and being hot and dry under the ardent southern sun, he had drunk this substance and been immediately metamorphosed into a young and radiant being.

Somewhat later, about the time that wine drinking became universal in Europe, Raymond Lully advanced a theory that the basic spirit of the wine was the elixir of life. He called what we now denote as alcohol aqua vitae ardens, and held that, could it be isolated, it would restore all who drank it to former states. When alcohol was distilled the followers of this theory held that the alcohol was not the pure essence, but that it, in turn, contained the true elixir in minute quantities—probably the fusel oil. In this theory there is again evident the inclination to regard the exciting and exhilarating drugs as youth restorers. Earlier dreamers had seen the property in bang, hemlock, and hellebore, while Lully felt the ravishment of wine and decided that it must have the properties of renewing life.

ALL AGES HAVE SOUGHT IT.

Paracelsus and other alchemists tried out both of these theories.

At a somewhat later period in Italy, France, and Germany, the craze for alchemic investigation led to the dabbling in every manner of poison, with the result that what little knowledge had been gained was used for the most monstrous purposes. Exili, the Italian chemist, furnished the original knowledge of poisons which enabled Mme. de Brinvilliers and her lovers to carry on their series of atrocities. La Voisin and her crew of so-called magicians—all poisoners of the worst character known to history—based their work largely upon the traffic in drugs which one of the alchemists in her train prepared. The black mass, performed by another of her satellites, was another of the outgrowths of the passion of those

Will Transform Rural Life, Making Power Available Despite Absence of Streams.

If we only knew how to do it, the average wind of thirty days might be made to supply us with enough power to perform all the mechanical operations in the world during a year.

How best to utilize this aerial force has been one of the ever-present problems of mankind since the first rude wind-mill was set up by a skin-clad savage in the Stone Age. Surprisingly little progress has been made in the matter. The mechanism of the latter-day windmill is, of course, a great improvement over that of the thirteenth century machine, but the gain in efficiency is not proportionately great. The utmost results secured from the best types of windmills are an uncertain amount of intermittent pumping and grinding. Nevertheless, on account of its economy and the fact that it will provide power where no other form of it is available, the windmill is one of the most useful and widely used mechanical contrivances.

A great step in advance was recently achieved by the perfection of an invention which makes the production of electricity from the wind a simple and inexpensive matter. After many years of investigation and experiment, J. G. Childs, a British engineer, has constructed what he calls a "wind turbine electric plant."

REMOVES INCONSTANCY.

There is nothing essentially original in this invention. It does not involve new principles, nor even fundamentally new mechanism. It is the ordinary windmill with its defects remedied and its possibilities developed. By adopting it to the generation of electricity he has removed its chief former shortcoming, that of an inconsistent supply of power.

The wind turbine is constructed in sizes varying from a wheel of twelve feet in diameter to one of seventy-two feet, with, of course, corresponding efficiency. The main feature of the installation that has been in practical operation for some time is a windmill, not unlike those commonly used for pumping water, but differing materially in construction, and having a much higher efficiency. A wheel twenty-four feet in diameter is mounted on an apparatus, like the rest of the plant, works automatically. All the parts that carry loads are fitted with ball bearings so that the wheel will respond to the lightest breath of air.

An ingenious device, in the form of a tall gear, keeps it face on to a moderate wind, but throws it around so as to offer less resistance when a predetermined velocity is attained. Since the plant has been in operation a severe gale swept over the district in which it stands, and although an unusually large tree was blown down close by, the wind turbine did not suffer the least damage.

CREATES POWER CHEAPLY.

The windmill operates in com-ations. It runs the laundry machinery and heats the irons. EFFECT ON SUBURBAN LIFE.

It is possible also to arrange so carpets are cleaned by the vacuum process and the furniture and walls dusted by suction. The housekeeper uses power from the same source to run her sewing machine and in the nursery it is employed to operate the youngsters' mechanical toys.

In the stables the plant drives machinery for cutting chaff, crushing oats, grinding corn, and hoisting hay into the loft. The gardener uses electric power in rolling the walks, cutting the grass and sprinkling the lawns.

The owner of the place uses an electric motor car because it is free from noise, dirt and odor, but, more than everything else, because he gets an unlimited quantity of electricity free without trouble. His machine is always ready for immediate use and no appreciable time or trouble is expended in keeping it in that condition. When it comes in from a trip it is run into the garage, and recharged by the wind-plant, either directly from the generator or from the storage battery.

Life in the country will be made immeasurably more attractive by the wind turbine.

UNCLE HIRAM TO NEPHEW.

Gives a Little Advice as to When to Make Decisions.

"Don't," said Uncle Hiram to his hopeful young nephew, "make any momentous decisions when you're tired. When you're tired we want to get the question settled and we're ready to make concessions, to give away, and the other man is sure to get the better of us."

"We often hear it said that it's a good thing when in doubt about anything to sleep on it, and this is sound advice. The general theory of the benefits to be derived from sleeping on a question is that sleep clarifies the mind, but in coming to a settlement about a thing the most important advantage that we find in sleeping on it lies in the renewed strength that sleep gives us. It renews our courage, makes us ready not to give way but to stand up and fight and fit and able to fight."

"Don't be in a terrible hurry to settle things, Stevey, anyway. There are times when you must strike when the iron is hot, but as a general proposition don't be impatient to get things settled; it's the man able to keep cool and wait and let the other fellow do the worrying that generally gets the biggest piece of the cake."

"We may meet occasionally a man of high and unbroken continuous courage, but not often; the biggest of men have heart sag at times, though they may not show it; we are all human and much alike under the skin if that's any comfort to you; we have all our moods; times when we are buoyant and happy and times when we are low in spirits and depressed."

"Don't, Stevey, settle things when you are feeling low and dispirited. You'll take a different view when you come back, as you inevitably will, to the summit."

"Let your decisions be made, Stevey, not when you are tired or depressed, but when you are fit and strong, and pride and habit will make you live up to them."

...the Egyptian priests, the Grecian adventures, the alchemists of the middle ages will have reached consummation—fruition—and man will have “attained the glorious state in which we may kiss and quaff the golden draught.”

PERPETUAL THEORY IS OLD.

Nearly every known century has had its theory of perpetual youth and the means by which this state might be attained. The quests for elixirs, fountains, and wonder draughts that might restore the fleet years have filled more pages of history, romance, and fable than any other single subject. It is probable that this search first disclosed to man the nature, uses, and abuses of those few drugs which were known before the age of chemistry; the marvels of Egyptian embalming probably were achieved as the best substitute for a substance that would provide immunity from age. Chemistry itself is the science which grew out of the millennial search for the philosopher's stone, one of those two properties was supposed to be this marvellous power. Even to-day the fondest dream of every scientific mind is the discovery of some agency that will restore the aged tissue and prolong life.

Only the wildest dreamers in the age of chemistry, now entering upon newer marvels, held that the elixir of life was still a possibility, yet to-day all the speculation is revived and there are competent authorities who will earnestly contend that the dream is not necessarily fatuous.

The reason for all this is patent. The restoration of youth is inseparably tangled with the dream of heaven, the tenets of every religion. Immortality is but another word for the perpetual spring of life. The Greek Elysium was a region in which the happy rejoined the remembered loved ones, restored to the prime of youth, to dwell in a deathless life “ever young and ever fair.” The Indian Happy Hunting Ground, Nirvana, Heaven, Valhalla, Paradise, Eden, Arcadia, Hesperides all carry this celestial thought. The fall of man, figuratively at least, cost him this blessing. The golden apples of the Hesperidesian gardens were supposed to restore youth and strength. Thus eternal youth and eternal life are the mainstreams of thought running through the dearest beliefs of every age and race.

THE ALCHEMISTS' PERIOD.

Again age and the approaching dissolution represent the supreme human tragedy. The greatest bait with which the devil tempted the religious in the old days was the promise of restored youth. So the aged Faust, rich, famous and wonderful, laments the absence of “a fellow that would enhance them all—fresh youth to enjoy them.” This is the false power barterers to him.

Before anything was known of the sciences men naturally conceived the restorer of youth to be some wondrous substance hidden in an obscure part of the world and closely guarded by fearsome monsters. The highest exploits of the heroes were the recovery of these possessions; yet, rationally enough, when the golden apples or whatever they may have been, according to the various fables, were recovered, the possessor invariably violated some proscription of the bestowing power, with the result that the effect was lost. Youth was never recovered.

poisoners of the worst character known to history—based their work largely upon the traffic in drugs which one of the alchemists in her train prepared. The black mass, performed by another of her satellites, was another of the outgrowths of the passion of those days for the unknowable.

Thus, in every age and many guises men have sought this restorer of the years. Is it possible that modern science, which has accomplished so many impossibilities, is to consummate even this.

CARS TO RUN DAY AND NIGHT

Traffic Will be Continuous in London at Coronation.

For two days this summer—that of the Coronation and the day after—London will be a wide-awake modern city, for instead of all traffic and life disappearing from the streets after midnight, tubes, buses and street cars will run day and night.

At the close of the evening traffic on June 21st the underground lines will shut down for an hour. At 3 a.m., on June 22nd the trains will start again, and the service will continue without intermission until 3 o'clock the next morning, the trains being lengthened and accelerated. On June 23rd the service will be continued until 2 o'clock in the morning, and again on the following Thursday, when the State Procession takes place.

In connection with the elaborate arrangements made for the protection of Westminster Abbey from fire during the Coronation period, a party of firemen have just made a tour of inspection. The 31 hydrants in the building—all connected with a huge tank in one of the towers—were tested and found in perfect order. Special telephones, connected with the nearest fire stations, have been installed.

While the Coronation ceremony is proceeding special firemen will be placed at fixed points in all parts of the building, each being within reach of an electrical fire alarm signal attached to the regular fire alarm pedestal on the ground floor.

TOO LATE!

Mr. W. Holt-White's recent book, “The People's King,” contains a little story of the late Edward VII. of England, with a moral that grandparents might wisely ponder—the remarks of young people may be worth heeding—once in a great while.

At a family luncheon at which three generations of the royal family were present, the king was interrupted in his conversation by a small voice calling insistently: “Grandpapa! Grandpapa!”

For a time the king devoted himself to his conversation and his salad, regardless of the voice which kept calling. “Grandpapa!” At last, compelled to pay attention to the interruption, the king uttered something about little boys who should be seen and not heard, and the rebuke silenced the prince.

When the meal was over, the king turned to his little grandson, and said:

“Now tell me what you want.”
“It is too late now, grandpapa.”
“Why is it too late?”
“Because I only wanted to tell you there was a caterpillar in your lettuce.”

swept over the district in which it stands, and although an unusually large tree was blown down close by, the wind turbine did not suffer the least damage.

CREATES POWER CHEAPLY.

The windmill operates in combination with a dynamo and storage battery. The generator is of four kilowatts capacity, with a normal voltage of about seventy. With an average wind of nine miles the output of the plant in a year will be 5,000 units, or considerably more than enough power to meet every requirement of the largest farm or estate.

It is the claim of the inventor that, allowing for wear and tear, the cost of the electricity obtained by this process will be something less than 1 per cent. per unit. That is to say, about $30 a year would cover the expense of lighting, heating, and all mechanical operations on a large scale.

The plant needs practically no care. An ordinary handy man in one hour a week can give it all the necessary attention. The gear is incased in a cast-iron oil bath, and the machinery might be allowed to run for twelve months without lubrication.

Curiously enough the first installation of this latest invention of the present age is in connection with one of the oldest houses in England, Buckenhill Hall, which was built at the beginning of Charles I.'s reign. In the time of the first owner the mansion was lighted by candles, the corn was threshed with a flail, and the water was drawn in buckets. Now, all these tasks, and many others, are performed by electricity derived from the wind and automatically applied.

The wind turbine promises to become a widely useful mechanical device. It makes electricity available in the most isolated places. It may be used for irrigation in the desert and for crushing ore in remotely situated mines. It will operate freight elevators at out-of-the-way railway stations and run machinery where no other power is available.

INVALUABLE IN COUNTRY.

Here are some of its possibilities on a farm: It pumps all the water used on the place and feeds an artificial stream and lake. The owner is relieved of the chief dread that besets the country resident. He goes to bed with the comfortable assurance that should fire break out his hydrants will furnish ample streams of water driven by electrical force.

All the buildings are lighted by electricity, the plant running 100 or more 16-candle power lamps if necessary. All parts of the house are connected by telephone, and communication with the stables, the bathhouse or the garage is readily secured through the same medium.

In the winter the residence and outbuildings are heated by electricity, and in the summer cooled by electric fans. One needs to have had experience of an electric cooking range to appreciate its benefits. It is the simplest and least troublesome arrangement imaginable. All that is necessary is to move a switch and the current does the rest. The food is not only cooked more easily and precisely but also more quickly than by any other process. In the kitchen department the utility of the plant is not limited to the culinary operated. You'll take a different view when you come back, as you inevitably will, to the summit.

TRICKY NATIVE GUIDES.

Some Dangers of Travel Through Tierra del Fuego.

Travelling through Tierra del Fuego is not without its dangers, as witness the following story of Charles W. Furlong, in the Outing, as a mere incident of one day:—

“When in the field, it is remarkable how keen and subconsciously sensitive the mind becomes to every sound and sight about one, doubly so to anything visual or otherwise not in attune with what seems to be the natural order of things. While my attention was fixed on the further opening of the narrows, I was not unmindful of every movement of the Fuegians on the four thwarts in front of me. The nearer ones blocked my view of those forward.

The first man scanned me closely, leaned carelessly to one side over the starboard gunwale, while the second lolled over to port. Before he had fully completed this action my rifle was in my hand, cocked and from my hip, pointing full at the breast of the third man, who sat amidships in the gap they had opened up, down which I looked at the barbed point of a heavy seal spear. His left hand lightly steadied the whalebone head, in their manner of throwing. But the man in front had moved a second too soon, for the weapon was poised in that preliminary position, but, thank Heaven, not drawn back. By way of subterfuge, he toyed with the loose end of a piece of sinew about the spear head and shaft, as though to fix it. Then, slightly disconcerted, he put down the spear. It was too accessible for my peace of mind, and he was ordered to stow it away under the thwarts.”

FINAN HADDIE COST $5.

Famous Monte Carlo Restaurant Makes Specialty of It.

Ciro's famous restaurant at Monte Carlo—the haunt of the gourmet in that paradise of cookery—has been acquired by an English syndicate for $170,000, and a rental of $15,000 a year. These figures hint at the profits of the Monte Carlo artist in food. Giro's is in the gallery Charles III., and consists of one fairly large restaurant and a small grill room. Giro feeds the most fashionable and wealthy set who frequent Monte Carlo. As the season does not last more than five months the profits must be enormous. No one knows that better than those who pay the prices. A dinner at Giro's—exclusive of wines, etc.—is considered cheap at $5 a head. One of Giro's most famous dishes is haddock—Scotch finnan haddock. It is sent from Aberdeen by parcel post—and is cooked in some wonderful way which preserves all the flavor of the haddock and adds some other delicious flavors as well. It is served with a poached egg on the top and new potatoes—there are always new potatoes at Monte Carlo—cooked in the jackets. The haddock thus served costs about $5.—London Chronicle.

THE POLICEMEN OF INDIA

THE PERILS OF THE ORIENT. AL PEELER.

Sympathy of the People With Criminals Makes Their Work Difficult.

The European officers of the Indian police are the hardest worked body of officials in the world, and their duties, more particularly in the country and jungle districts, are of an exceeding varied and difficult nature, writes an ex-inspector in London answers.

From the earliest morning until far into the night they are on the alert, now quelling brawls in the bazaars, or religious riots, now in pursuit of dacoits and cattle thieves or probing apparently unfathomable mysteries of daring robberies and murder outrages. Then, after having passed the day in the arduous task of protecting the law-abiding citizens against the vast army of criminals, and trying to bring the latter to book, they are often called out to secure absconding elephants, running riot and causing devastation in the plantations, or to free an outlying village from the attentions of a man-eating tiger.

BLUFFING THE "BOBBIES."

And, in order to cope with all such eventualities, an inspector of the district, comprising perhaps forty or more villages, each separated from the other by miles of impenetrable jungle, is given only one of two white constables and a posse of native policemen. The latter are mostly Pathans, a physically well-developed and strong people, but, unfortunately, quite unreliable and often treacherous.

Moreover, to further increase the difficulties of the position, the people in towns and villages show an open antipathy, not to say hostility, to the police force. Instead of assisting, they place difficulties in the way, and mislead the officers, even though they might be in possession of clues as to the identity or whereabouts of the wanted criminals.

If, further, we take into consideration the fact that the criminal gangs are invariably closely organized secret societies, such as societies of burglars, cattle thieves, housebreakers, dacoits, etc., the reader will be able to gauge the enormity of the problems with which the Indian police have to cope in the course of their daily routine. Perhaps routine is hardly the word to describe conditions offering so much variety and excitement.

Thus, a couple of years ago, I was in charge of an extensive jungle district in the Punjab, some eighty miles to the south of Khan. At the time we were pestered with a particularly audacious gang of robbers, whose deeds and tactics proved them to be at the very height of their profession, and well acquainted with local conditions. They operated indiscriminately in the European and native settlements, and had even forced their entrance into the police and military posts, with a view to stealing weapons, and all kinds of valuables on which they could lay their hands.

TWO STRANGE FARMS.

Japanese Institutions That Claim Pre-eminence for Oddity.

Japan possesses two of the oddest farms in the world. From one there goes out each year a crop of tens of thousands of snapping turtles. This farm has solved the problem of preserving the supply of what is to the Japanese as great a delicacy as diamond back terrapin is to some Americans.

This queer farm consists of a number of ponds. Certain of them are set apart as breeding ponds. Once a day a man goes over the shores and with little wire baskets covers up all new egg deposits. Sometimes thousands of these wire baskets are in sight at a time, marking the places where the eggs lie and preventing the turtles from scratching the earth from them.

Hatching requires from 40 to 60 days, according to the weather. The young, as soon as they appear, are put in separate small ponds and are fed finely chopped fish. They eat this during September and October and late in October burrow in the mud for the winter, coming on in April or May. Most of them are sold in the market when they are from three to five years old, at which time they are most delicate.

The island empire also contains a pearl oyster farm. In the Bay of Ago there has been established a plantation from which a rich harvest is obtained. In May or June stones weighing from six to eight pounds are sunk in shallow water, and in August the tiny shells begin to appear on them. Here the stones remain for two months; but, since the younger oysters cannot stand cold, in November all rocks in less than five feet of water are moved farther out, where the temperature is more even. At the end of three years, when the shells are about two inches across, they are taken from the water, nuclei for pearls are inserted in them, and they are put back again, thirty of them to every six square feet of bottom.

They are left there four years. Then, being seven and one-half years old, they are removed and searched for pearls. The harvest of artificial or "culture" pearls is very large, but, unfortunately, these are only little more than half pearls, for although large, lustrous, and of fine quality, they are flat on one side. This farm has an additional source of income in the natural pearls that its oysters produce, for there is not lacking in them the usual proportion of perfect gems to be found among oysters of this variety. — Harper's Weekly.

PERSIAN ETIQUETTE.

Conversation Chief Enjoyment—Strict Observance of Customs.

The pleasures of the Persians are in the main refined. They have not many kinds of recreation. Conversation is one of their chief enjoyments. Although a large proportion of them can neither read nor write I think we must call them an intellectual people, writes Mary A. Colquhoun.

They are natural linguists and since their country is inhabited by so many different races they are obliged to speak several different languages. It is not uncommon to find a man who scarcely knows his right hand from his left who can speak two or three languages fluently; to this number a man of any education whatever would add two or three more.

There is no caste among any of the races found in Persia. A son of Nasir-i-Din, Shah's butler, became his Prime Minister; a peasant girl once became the first favorite of this same King's and her beauty appealed to the royal fancy.

But while there is no caste the Persians are in some ways great sticklers for etiquette. The Ziti-Sultan, the oldest and most capable son of Nasir-i-Din, could not succeed his father on the throne because his mother was not of royal birth. All social functions, moreover, are attended with the most rigid ceremonies and woe to the person who attempts to overstep the bounds which custom has prescribed for his rank.

Some barbarous and absurd customs of earlier times are passing away. One amusing custom of former years is now almost if not entirely abandoned. It was once a capital offence for a man to remain in any street through which the royal harem was passing. Outriders loudly announced the approach of the ladies and the men hurried down side streets, into shops or houses, or into any other place of safety that they could find. Any man so unfortunate as not to be able to make his escape turned his face to the wall.

An eccentric European several years ago met the royal harem unexpectedly in the street; turned his face to the wall, like a native, and as each carriage passed, deliberately bowed backward. This greatly amused the ladies and they told the Shah of it. Now Nasir-i-Din never lost an opportunity to get what amusement there is to be got out of life, so he sent for this man, made him repeat his salutes and, after laughing heartily, gave him a handsome present.

BANK OF ENGLAND NOTE.

Qualities Which Prevent Successful Counterfeiting.

About the year 1819 a great outcry was raised against the Bank of England for not adopting a style of note that could not be imitated and at the same time preventing the sacrifice of life which at that period was common, the punishment for forgery being death. The subject at last became so pressing that the Government appointed commissioners to investigate the cause of the numerous forgeries and whether a mode could be devised

TRACTS FOR SETTLEMENT

ALMOST LIMITLESS CAPABILITIES OF PRAIRIES.

143,285,412 Acres Surveyed for Settlement—250,000,000 Not Yet "Plotted."

A map of the Canadian West (and as far as is known of the Northwest) was compiled in the Department of the Interior last year and is now available. The present limits of the Provinces are shown and special attention is given to the three Prairie Provinces, as the map is particularly designed to show the wheat possibilities of the Dominion in these new districts.

In Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta 143,285,412 acres of land have been surveyed for settlement. This does not include the lands set aside as Indian and forest reserves and as parish and river lot settlements. Of this great extent already surveyed 4,500,000 acres were recorded as early as 1873—being the smallest portion of Manitoba in the vicinity of Manitoba. Nearly half of this land lies south of latitude 54 degrees. After this survey will at once be instituted which will probably cover the whole of the present limits of the Province and extend along the routes proposed for the Hudson Bay Railway. In this district wheat has been grown at the fifty-sixth parallel of latitude. Westward the wheat limit is shown to reach the sixtieth and sixty-second parallels—in the Yukon and in the unnamed country north of Alberta.

20,000,000 ACRES GRANTED.

Besides the 143,000,000 acres already surveyed there are 250,000,000 acres not yet "plotted" in these three prairie Provinces—all of which are climatically suitable for wheat raising and a great percentage suitable as regards soil conditions. Of this great area only 11,960,000 acres were under cultivation in 1909.

It is this part of the Dominion which is receiving the greatest amount of public attention. Out in these prairie Provinces the "free homestead entries" from March, 1909, to March, 1910, totalled 6,650,880 acres; and during the last two years 20,000,000 acres have been granted by the Government under the homestead and pre-emption laws. Under this latter law, the payment is made for the land—it costs from $5 to $15 per acre.

Great tracts of irrigated lands have also been sold by the Canadian Pacific Railway together with blocks of "ready made farms" which have proved so successful that this season the company purposes to greatly extend the system.

W. Whyte, of the Canadian Pacific Railway, has estimated that in fifteen years the Province of Saskatchewan alone will be producing as much wheat as the whole of the United States.

COMPARED WITH TOBOLSK.

This seems, perhaps, an exaggeration, but in the map referred to an interesting comparison is made with the Russian province of Tobolsk, which indicates the possibil-

they operated indiscriminately on the European and native settlements, and had even forced their entrance into the police and military posts, with a view to stealing weapons, and all kinds of valuables on which they could lay their hands.

THE SECRET POTION.

A peculiar feature of their procedure was that they invariably administered some insidious drug to their intended victims, and whilst the latter were under its effect quietly raided the place and disappeared before the alarm could be given. This fact satisfied us that the native servants were party to the conspiracy; but whether they had been terrorised into silence, or whether they shared in the proceedings, the most stringent examinations and inquiries proved abortive. Promises of rewards and threats alike failed to loosen their tongues, and in the absence of incriminating evidence we could not even arrest them.

Meanwhile, robberies continued to be perpetrated daily. Complaints poured into my office from places which were twenty and thirty miles apart, and in every case, whether my agents or myself took charge of them, we had always to confess ourselves beaten and utterly baffled, however unwillingly.

This had now been going on for some three months. The robbers grew more audacious with every successful coup. In some instances we had plenty of evidence that the villagers were either in league with the gang, or had, at any rate, seen and known some members; but, although we descended upon them, and cross-examined every inhabitant, we could not secure any but false clues. I was exasperated.

It was only by accident that we eventually secured the band, some stolen goods having been traced back to the shop of a much respected Mohammedan dealer, who lived only a few miles from the police headquarters. And, after keeping a close watch upon himself and his visitors, we secured him, with twenty-eight associates, and the major part of the property that had been stolen. This was a most important capture, for we were in hopes of at last learning the nature of the drug they used, and the manner in which it was administered, two secrets which are only in the possession of this particular class of criminal, and which the Indian police have been trying to discover for many years.

Here, at last was our chance; but, try as we would, neither offers of free pardon and huge rewards nor any other kind of persuasion would induce them to part with the coveted information, so they were all tried and sentenced to transportation.

DODGING THE DAGGER.

Shortly after the trial, I was shot at twice in a most mysterious manner, without, however, suffering any damage, and letters were found in my office warning me to leave the district, if I would escape the dagger or the poison of my enemies. Such incidents are very common in India, and a successful detective, after he has cleared a district of some particular kind of pests, has invariably to ask for his removal to a different district, lest he fall a victim of some assassin.

As I was married, and accompanied by my wife, I allowed myself to be persuaded, and took charge of ### Comparisons as to England's Eminent Men's Headgear.

Speaking of hats an English writer says: It is astonishing how careless many eminent men have been about their headgear. The great Duke of Wellington is credited with wearing one hat until it was so bad that a tactful friend persuaded him to give it away to a servant. Some days afterwards, we are told, the Duke saw this same hat, newly ironed, on a chair in the hall, where the servant had at that moment placed it. "A nice hat that," observed the Duke. "Yes," replied the servant; "it's the one your Grace gave to me. I've had it done up." "What did it cost you?" inquired the Duke. "One shilling," was the answer. "Here's half-a-crown; I'll have it back," and Wellington is reported to have taken it, and worn it again till his friends protested against its shabbiness.

Perhaps the remaining most remarkable historical comparison in hats is between the plain, steeple-crowned, broad-brimmed hats of the Puritans and the flat, broad, feather-bedecked hats fashionable with the Cavaliers of Charles II.

Nowadays the most striking fact about fashion in hats is that while our women vie with one another in carrying the largest artificial garden beds and beehives on their heads, our men are eager for the lightest and most easy fitting felts. The demand for a comfortable fitting felt has led to the invention of machinery that has numbered the days of the orthodox sizes—the 7-1-8 worn by the late King Edward, the 7-1-8 of Dickens and John Bright, the 7-3-8 of Mr. Gladstone and the enormous 8-1-2 of Daniel O'Connell, etc.

REPAIRS NOSES AND RIBS.

Surgeon Tells of Successful Operations Already Performed.

Noses repaired with bone taken from ribs of the patient whose features are undergoing reconstruction represent the latest advance in surgery. In the current number of the Journal of American Medicine, Dr. W. W. Carter tells of successfully performing several operations of this character.

The best case is that which restored to facial sightliness a railroad man who came out of an accident with his nose so disfigured that there was little of it left. The surgeon took a piece two inches in length from the patient's ninth rib and setting one end of it on the remaining tip of the nose and the other on the nasal process of the front bone grafted it with care. The still living bone of the rib united with the nasal structure and formed a rafter which effectually supported the flaps of skin which were brought up over this newly fashioned feature. Photographs taken before and after show a marked increase in good looks on the part of the patient.

In another instance a girl six years of age had fallen on her face and flattened her nose badly. The operation, which cost a small section of rib, gave her a perfect profile. Another patient was a woman twenty-five years old, who had fallen on her nose when she was seven years old. The deformity was of the flattened and concave variety. The surgeon constructed a bridge from part of her ninth rib and she is now of almost Grecian symmetry.

science of the manner in which a punishment for forgery being death. The subject at last became so pressing that the Government appointed commissioners to investigate the cause of the numerous forgeries and whether a mode could be devised whereby the forging of bank notes might be prevented.

Previous to this investigation the directors of the bank had been endeavoring to remedy the evil, many plans having been submitted to them, all of which they were obliged to reject.

The bank placed before the commissioners 180 different projects that had been recommended for adoption and 70 varieties of paper made by way of experiment. The result of all this labor was the bank note of to-day.

The color of the paper is peculiar and cannot be imitated exactly by counterfeiters, except at great expense. The combined thinness and strength of the paper are also unique. It is made in sheets large enough for two notes. Each note before it is sized weighs about 18 grains, and then if doubled it is strong enough to suspend a weight of 36 pounds.

The texture of the paper is also peculiar. It has a crisp feel invariably the same, and such that bank clerks of experience can readily detect forgeries by this test alone. Then the wire mark impressed in the making by a frame costly to make and difficult to use, is practically inimitable.

Each note has thin, rough edges, uncut not to be produced by any mode of cutting paper that is not devised expressly for the purpose. The paper for printing is damped with water in the exhaustive receiver of an air pump. The ink used in the plate printing is made of Frankfort black, which is composed of the charcoals of the tendrils and husks of the German grape ground with linseed oil. ### THEORY AS TO MULE'S KICKS.

Scientist Says Beast's "Cussedness" is Sort of Cataleptic State.

Prof. Wyndham Cottle of the Royal College of Surgeons says that long continued painful emotion in a mule, such as fear or anger, is translated into actual, if temporary paralysis. In this announcement the professor is publicly backed up by Dr. R. Cunyngham Brown of the Isle of Wight.

These two London, Eng., investigators, who are prominent members of the National Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, assert that what is commonly considered as "cussedness" in a mule is simply a sort of cataleptic state into which the poor animal has fallen through fright or indignation. The beast does not balk intentionally, and there is no malice in the kick it so often delivers when in this condition. Often the kick puts whoever gets in the way into a state of paralysis or catalepsy.

Gentle treatment, kind words, perhaps a bit of sugar, are the best ways for restoring a distracted and irresponsible mule to its normal state. "Sulking" animals, assert the two learned investigators, are as a rule not sulking at all, but are merely scared out of the voluntary use of their muscles.

COMPARED WITH TOBOLSK.

This seems, perhaps, an exaggeration, but in the map referred to an interesting comparison is made with the Russian province of Tobolsk, which indicates the possibility of such expansion of the wheat production.

The Canadian city of Edmonton is almost on a line with the most southern point of this Russian grain province, and it has been found possible to raise wheat 700 miles north of Edmonton.

The most noteworthy wheat experiments shown on this latest map are at Simpson, on the Mackenzie River—latitude 62, a little further than 750 miles north of Edmonton. At the 700 mile point not only has wheat been grown, but a regular dairy farm is in operation, which provides all dairy produce, vegetables and grain for the Hudson Bay posts and those of the Revillon Bros., which are within reasonable radius.

OTHER EXPANSION POSSIBLE.

From just such a locality as this, in Russia, Great Britain imports as much as 19,712,000 pounds of butter annually; so there is more than the wheat and other grain wealth to be looked for from these new Prairie Provinces.

With the growth of the past few years the trade in the Dominion is already showing great annual increase. The latest report shows an increase of $70,144,295 in the trade figures of the past ten months of the fiscal year, as compared with the same period of last year. The total trade reached $634,431,675.

The capital flowing into the new districts is, in proportion to the number of citizens, equally large, as besides investments of foreign capital, the newcomers have themselves brought an unusual amount of money into the country.

A ROMANTIC STORY.

Life History of the Prime Minister of New South Wales.

The Prime Minister of New South Wales, the Hon. James Sinclair McGowen, has arrived in London to attend the Coronation ceremonies. Mr. McGowen's life story is a peculiarly romantic one. He was born somewhere in the Pacific. It was in the days of sailing ships, and the Western Bride lay becalmed. But in the hour of the future Premier's birth a breeze sprang up, and in three weeks the ship had arrived at her destination. The babe was hailed by the crew as an omen of good fortune, and christened after the Captain, whose name was Sinclair. "Captain Sinclair prophesied that I should have a fair wind all my life," Mr. McGowen adds, laughingly. Mr. McGowen's birth was registered at Stepney, as he was born at sea under the British flag in a ship belonging to the Port of London. Here comes a strange coincidence: Mr. McGowen was never out of Australia till he left for the Coronation, and the taking of the census coincided with his voyage. While on the high seas his name was counted among British born citizens, and once more the fact was recorded at Stepney. The Premier of New South Wales is a big, rugged man, who has followed his father's trade of a boilermaker. He has been a member of the New South Wales Parliament for over twenty years.

UNIVERSITY OF FRANCE.

Essentially the Same Today as When Established by Napoleon.

In the United States there are many universities which are free from state control, but in France there is only one university, and it is an absolute instrument of the state. It is true that there are schools of higher learning, which were founded in 1870 as universities, but five years afterward the title was withdrawn, and they are now called "instituts." They are five in number and are located in Paris, Lille, Lyons, Toulouse and Angers.

But the University of France is an entirely different organization. It is the official school. It is centralized in Paris and has under it a vast multitude of establishments, faculties, college and primary schools, distributed over the whole surface of the country. Directly or indirectly they all depend on the government.

The university was established by Napoleon, and in spite of certain modifications which it has undergone during years it is the same today in its essential elements as the day he founded it. Just as he established the entire civil administration, with its prefects, subprefects, judges, ministers of finance, so he created in 1808 this vast educational organization, with its countless professors, who control the entire intellectual training of France.—America.

An Ottawa despatch says that with object of diverting attention in the west from his stand on reciprocity, Mr. Borden will talk Government ownership and operation of the Hudson Bay Railroad and terminal elevators, and will favor the increase of the British preference. ## WHAT HE FORGOT

For the Time Being It Was Serious

By Clarissa Mackie

Quintin attached himself to the line at the ticket window and awaited his turn. He felt that the eyes of the whole world were upon him, and he knew that this was the very proudest moment of his life. Suddenly he bent down to recover the glove which had dropped from his hand, and at the same instant the man ahead swung quickly around, bringing the corner of a heavy suit case in violent contact with Quintin's head.

"I beg your pardon," said the stranger as he returned Quintin's fallen hat. "I hope you are not hurt."

"That's all right," said Quintin thickly, staring dazedly at the man. "Gave me a confounded headache, you know."

At the ticket window the man asked him twice before Quintin gathered himself together sufficiently to reply.

"One—Miraflores," he said, pushing some money across the counter.

When the train pulled out he was comfortably napping in his seat.

The conductor aroused him to punch his ticket and thrust the pasteboard in a convenient place, and Quintin nodded off again, conscious that his head was aching splittingly and that so far as he was concerned the express might go on and on forever until it reached the end of the world and then drop off into space. Quintin did not know that these fantastic thoughts were a legacy of the blow he had received that evening. He knew only two things. One was that Cynthia Dewbury lived at Miraflores and that his ticket bore the name of that beautiful residential city.

Quintin's people also lived at Miraflores, and for years it had been his habit to run down there every Saturday afternoon for the week end. It was an hour out of New York and the first stop made by the limited express.

"Miraflores—Miraflores!" sounded from either end of the car, and, only half awake, Quintin aroused himself and dragged down his suit case, got into his overcoat, jammed on his hat, and, quite unconscious of the many curious glances shot after him by his fellow travelers who got off at the same station, he left the train and walked through the station to the opposite side, where he boarded a trolley car for his father's house.

The car was of an obsolete type, and as the little conveyance jiggled along the track its rocking motion accentuated Quintin's racking headache. He had only a confused recollection of the happenings of the day, but he could piece together a few facts, the principal one of which was that something very unusual had occurred which had now slipped his mind altogether. Another matter that worried him was the idea that he had left something behind. Over and over again he counted his belongings. They were easily enumerated—his suit case, umbrella, and, of course, it, what was that other thing which he could not remember? He sat with bent head and knitted experience of Mr. Crawford Fitch, the author of "Mediterranean Moods," is the railways. "The engine," he says, "is continually making frantic dashes for the scenery. On the line to Tortoll I made four journeys and had three accidents. On one occasion, after a car had been wrecked, the various employees gathered round the wreckage and spent the remainder of a sultry afternoon in bitterly disputing the proper apportionment of blame for the accident. As it was impossible to proceed that evening I spent the night at the railway station and enjoyed a comfort that I found nowhere else in the island."

Another peril is the dogs, who do not hesitate to attack a stranger, even when he is walking peaceably upon the highroad. "The breed is particularly ferocious, and it is said that the peasants have a way of stimulating their ferocity by tying a bladder filled with blood to the neck of a dummy man and encouraging the animal to spring at the neck and tear open the bladder."

They have poured out money like water to flood the country with skillfully dished up falsehoods which are laughed at by those farmers who happen to read them. ### Dundas Banner.

If all the anti-reciprocity talk—the labored argument and vehement assertions of personal loyalty—were not so abominably silly they might be used in the humorous column. Poor, inert, half-asleep Canada—she has no say in the matter; all she can do is to sit still and let Uncle Sam run the whole show, and when he gets ready he'll just come over the border and take possession, whether he does it by seduction or by force doesn't matter. That's the gist of the argument put up by those who are bellowing about annexation. It's equal to Farmer Smith saying across the fence to Farmer Brown: "Waal, neighbor, guess I'll not trade hosses with ye, because ye hev sich a winnin' smile and sedocin' waays that if I do I'm afeared ye'll hev my hull farm inside of six months."

Kingston Standard, (Conservative.)

The Standard has no sympathy with these newspapers—happily their number is not large—who forget the dignity of their calling and descend to personalities that are as petty as they are contemptible. We have had a conspicuous example of this lately in the personal ridicule that has been heaped upon Rev. J. A. Macdonald, editor of The Globe, because he was guilty of the atrocious crime of carrying a message of friendship and brotherliness to some of our kin across the sea. In these papers it has become the fashion to dub Dr. Macdonald as "Taft's errand boy," "the American lackey," and the like. Now, this may seem to the editors who thus indulge themselves to be "smart"—clever it certainly is not—but we much mistake the temper of the Canadian press generally if this "smartness" is not severely condemned and put down for what undoubtedly it actually is—professional jealousy of a peculiarly small kind. Dr. Macdonald may have his faults—what man is without them?—but that is no excuse for other editors to make themselves and their papers ridiculous by descending to nasty personalities. The Canadian press should be—and the better part of it is—above this sort of yellowness.

other matter that worried him was the idea that he had left something behind. Over and over again he counted his belongings. They were easily enumerated—his suit case, umbrella, and, unfound it, what was that other thing which he could not remember?

He sat with bent head and knitted brow, puzzling over the matter with a growing conviction that he would not solve the problem until something cleared away the confusion in his head. When he arrived home he would get his sister Amy to prepare a bromo seltzer—nothing like that stuff for knocking out a headache.

Old Martin admitted Dick Quintin to his father's house, and, beyond the first incredulous stare into the empty darkness behind the young man, he showed no sign of surprise at his master's return.

"Where is my father, Martin?" demanded Dick as he turned his luggage over to the butler.

"In the library, Master Dick," said the servant, throwing open the door of Mr. Quintin's spacious private room.

As the door closed behind Dick two forms arose from the high backed chairs on either side of the wide hearth. One was his father, staring and incredulous as Martin had been; the other was Amy, his sister, her fair face pale and startled.

"Why, son, what is the matter?" asked the elder man as he approached the dazed looking youth.

"Something dreadful has happened!" cried Amy clinging to her brother's arm. "Oh, Dick, what is the matter?"

"Nothing has happened," returned Dick, with an air of irritation. "Is it so unusual for me to return to my father's house?"

"It is unusual under the circumstances," said Mr. Quintin, with a warning gesture toward his daughter. "You must have some explanation to offer us for your sudden return tonight."

Dick Quintin rubbed his head thoughtfully. Every time his hand touched the lump raised by that blow from the stranger's suit case he winced with pain. He felt agitated desire for sleep, and he longed to throw himself down on the fur rug on the hearth and lose himself in the blessed unconsciousness of slumber. He yawned prodigiously, excused himself and turned to his father, who waited impatiently for his reply. There was a visible strain of anxiety about the old man's face.

"Tell me what you are doing down here tonight, Dick," he commanded.

"Why—why, I came down to see Cynthia Dewbury," said Dick, relieved at last to find that he could remember why he had come down.

"Cynthia Dewbury!" repeated his father sternly.

"Cynthia Dewbury! Oh, Dick Quintin," shrieked Amy, shaking his arm vigorously, "you ought to be ashamed of yourself!"

Dick stared dully at them. "I have a very bad headache," he said soberly. "If you'd fix me up a bromo I think I'd feel better, sis." He sank down in a big chair and nodded drowsily. His father bent above him and looked closely at the young man's pale, clear cut face. He thought it looked unnaturally white, and there was a heaviness about the eyes that alarmed him.

"I thought he was intoxicated at first," he muttered to himself as he left the room and locked himself in the telephone booth. As he passed through the hall on his way back to the library he spoke to the waiting Martin. "Dr. Gray will be here presently; send him into the library, Martin."

"Yes, sir," said Martin.

In the library Amy was mixing the foaming drink in a tumbler, and Dick drank it greedily.

"Gee, but my head feels awful!" he murmured as he sank back in his chair and went directly to sleep.

Dr. Gray arrived and listened to what the father and sister of Dick Quintin had to say.

"Queer, confoundedly queer, I must admit," he commented as he bent over the young man. "Said he came down see to Cynthia Dewbury, eh?"

"Yes," said Mr. Quintin, with dry lips.

"Used to think a lot of her?" asked the physician musingly.

Mr. Quintin's face wore a look of displeasure. "That was in Dick's younger days, doctor. Under the circumstances one could hardly expect that he had not recovered from any prior attachment," he said significantly.

"Hardly!" ejaculated Dr. Gray, running his fingers skillfully over Dick's head. "Ah, young man, hurt you that time!" as Dick winced and stirred to wakefulness. "Pain in your head, Dicky, boy?"

"Rather," groaned Dick, opening his eyes. "How are you, doc?"

"I'm all right, thanks," responded the doctor dryly.

"Anybody sick here," continued Dick, sitting up straight and looking around with worried frown—"father. Amy?"

"We're all right, Dick," assured his father. "The doctor happened in, and as you complained about your head I thought you might like to tell him about it."

"How did you get it?" asked the doctor, sitting down beside his son.

ABOUT THE CAMORRA.

The Way the World's Greatest Secret Society Works.

A sensational murder trial that is expected to last a year is proceeding in Italy.

Over seven hundred witnesses will be called against thirty-six prisoners, who sit in tiers in a great iron cage in the court house. Those thirty-six men are the chiefs of the Camorra, that dread secret society which for the last ten years the Italian Government has been endeavoring to stamp out of existence.

The Camorra has been in existence nearly a century now. One of its specialties is political corruption. On its milder side it is remarkably like the notorious New York Tammany system. One reason why it has been so hard to suppress is that many people of rank—bishops and Cabinet Ministers among them—have silently worked to support it.

But this is only the "kid-glove" Camorra. The basis of the Camorra is blackmail. It takes its toll from rich and poor. At Naples, which is the headquarters of the Camorra, an ab servant tourist would, not many years ago, have noticed that, when he paid a boatman or a cabman or a stall-keeper, a well-dressed figure lounging near always received a share of whatever money was received as a matter of course.

A question would have led to the answer, "Oh, it is the Camorra man!" given in a most matter-of-fact tone. The Camorra had its finger in every pie. Naples had been used to the

The End of the Story.

There is an amusing anecdote about King Louis of Bavaria in Lady Dorothy Nevill's reminiscences: "Resolving to relieve the needs of one of his poor but brave aide-de-camps, he sent him a small portfolio, bound like a book, in which were deposited 500 crowns. Some time afterward he met the officer and said to him, 'Ah, well, how did you like the new work which I sent you?' 'Excessively, sire,' replied the colonel. 'I read it with such interest that I expect the second volume with impatience.' The king smiled, and when the officer's birthday arrived he presented him with another portfolio similar in every respect to the first, but these words engraved upon it: 'This book is complete in two volumes.'"

The Scottish View.

How an English church service struck the Scottish Presbyterian of the fifties of the last century is told in Mrs. L. B. Walford's reminiscences: "There was the two of them," cried one of her Scottish handmaidens in mingled terror and indignation, relapsing into the broadest vernacular. "Thae twa men, dressed out like folk at a fair, bowin' to each other an' answerin' each other across the table and the rest cryin' ower an' ower, 'The Lord ha' maircy upon us!' An' a' the time there was the organ bumm-in' awa' overheid! Me! I thoct it was the theatre!"

How to Test Eggs.

Take a deep dish, fill with cold water and drop in your eggs. If they are fresh they will sink to the bottom on their side; if they are cold storage they will float on end. Take some fresh eggs and some cold storage eggs and try it. This is an un-failing test.

"How did you get it?" asked the doctor, sitting down beside his patient. "You haven't been running up against a blackjack, have you?" "I don't know. I've been trying to recollect what happened to make my head ache so confoundedly. I've been forgetting a lot of things ever since I left the station. There's one thing in particular that I simply must remember." Dick dropped his head into his upturned palms and closed his eyes. "You remember that you came down to Miraflores to see Cynthia Dewbury?" asked the doctor softly. "Oh, yes, of course! I always go to see Cynthia Dewbury when I come down," returned Dick impatiently. The doctor crossed the room to confer with Mr. Quintin. "If you will leave me alone with Dick for awhile I think I can locate the point of trouble and perhaps correct it. I'll send Martin around to my office for some more instruments, with your permission."

"Of course we are all at your service," assured Mr. Quintin, and while Martin hastened around to the doctor's office that gentleman sat alone in the library with Dick Quintin.

The young man still sat moodily staring into the fire. Suddenly the physician leaned forward and tapped Dick on the knee.

"How's Edith?" he asked significantly.

Instantly Dick Quintin was on his feet staring wildly around the room. "Edith? Edith?" he repeated in a stunned tone. "Why, I haven't seen Edith since I went to buy our tickets this afternoon!"

"Yes," soothed the doctor, "and what happened when you went to buy the tickets?"

"I think I leaned over to pick up something and a man struck me on the head with something—I know it was his suit case, for he apologized afterward. But what am I doing here? Where's Edith?"

"She's probably waiting for you wherever you left her. Hold on, there, Dick—not so fast, my boy! It's 9:30 now and"—Dick's brandished arm cut the doctor's sentence short.

"Was I married to Edith Martin this noon?" demanded the young man fiercely.

"Yes, you were, because I saw you married, and your father and Amy have just returned from the reception. Now, Dick, my lad, we've just time to take that 10:30 back to town—oh, yes, you'll need all three of us to prove an alibi. That blow on your head caused temporary loss of memory, and you forgot you had just been married, and, according to your confirmed habit, you bought a ticket for Miraflores instead of Atlantic City, wasn't it?"

Dick's groan was lost in a hurried donning of outer garments as Amy, Mr. Quintin and the doctor prepared to accompany him back to New York, where his frightened bride awaited him in the railroad station where he had left her.

Everybody forgot about Cynthia Dewbury, Dick's old flame, and it was just as well, because Cynthia had been married a half dozen years before.

Up to Him.

Tam—I'm dead sore. I lost $5 today. I feel like somebody ought to kick me.

Tess (absently)—Why don't you ask father for my hand to-night. He's right in the library.

A Rat Massacre.

No fewer than 27 rats were killed during the threshing of an average corn-rick in Berkshire.

"Oh, it is the Camorra man!" given in a most matter-of-fact tone. The Camorra had its finger in every pie. Naples had been used to the system so long that it was quite content. In return the Camorra men, always known by the shade of their dark, well-cut clothes, guaranteed the Camorra's protection against robbery, and acted as umpires in market disputes.

Nobody dared object, or he was apt to die with tragic suddenness. Nobody dared try to stir up his friends to resist the payment, for his dearest friend was as likely as not a Camorra secret agent. The Camorra counts its men by thousands in Naples alone.

This public blackmail on the poor is not carried on now—openly, at any rate. But it is a well-known fact that the Camorra still levies a heavy tax on the gambling houses and auction-rooms of Naples. The Neapolitan still holds the Camorra in the sincerest dread. A very few years ago the city authorities had to appeal to the Camorra to stop a cat strike that was ruining the city's tourist trade. The Camorra undertook the task, and in six hours the strike was over.

During the revolution of 1860 the Camorra had to be requested to act as the police authority. For weeks the turbulent Neapolitans were as quiet as mice.

The Camorra leaves no theatrical trade-marks on its head. It is a severely businesslike organization, with "centres" and "sub-centres," secretaries and treasurers. Each centre pools its takings, and divides them according to rank and seniority. The chiefs of the centres form the "grand senate," which uses the post for its consultations. It never meets, for it is a crime among the Camorra, punishable by death, to endeavor to trace the identity of the president, or Wise Master. The police strongly suspect that among the thirty-six chiefs in that iron cage they have the Wise Master. But not even the one who has turned informer can help them there.

The Neapolitan boy who has just left school is as likely as not to inquire if there is a vacancy in the local centre of the Camorra. If not, he turns to some other trade. If there is, he puts in a year's apprenticeship, being bound to a seasoned Camorrista.

During that year he gets lessons in knifing, for the Camorra has many private knifing schools. It is not till he has served his year that he gets more than a few pence out of the centre's weekly takings.

Scaring the Lizard.

Some caterpillars have the power of fixing themselves by their two hind feet to a twig and stretching themselves out as straight as a rod, so that, being in color much like the twig of a tree on the leaves of which they feed, they are not readily observed. The muscular power required for this position of rest is great, and the number of muscles is found to be 4,000. When this fails to deceive a lizard about to devour it the caterpillar will lift its head to frighten its enemy and act like an angry snake, but gradually the lizard comes nearer and nearer with watchful eyes and finally attacks and devours its victim.

DOCTOR ADVISED OPERATION

Cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Canifton, Ont.—"I had been a great sufferer for five years. One doctor told me it was ulcers of the uterus, and another told me it was a fibroid tumor. No one knows what I suffered. I would always be worse at certain periods, and never was regular, and the bearing-down pains were terrible. I was very ill in bed, and the doctor told me I would have to have an operation, and that I might die during the operation. I wrote to my sister about it and she advised me to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. Through personal experience I have found it the best medicine in the world for female troubles, for it has cured me, and I did not have to have the operation after all. The Compound also helped me while passing through Change of Life." Mrs. LETITIA BLAIR, Canifton, Ontario.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from roots and herbs, has proved to be the most successful remedy for curing the worst forms of female ills, including displacements, inflammation, fibroid tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, bearing-down feeling, flatulency, indigestion, and nervous prostration. It costs but a trifle to try it, and the result has been worth millions to suffering women.

A certain well-known but rather near-sighted and absent-minded bishop once went down to a place in the West of England to officiate at the marriage ceremony of a lady whose parents were amongst his oldest friends. He arrived the day before the wedding, but owing to the pressure of engagements he had to leave the same time as the bridal pair, but was driven to a different station. As he proceeded to take his place in the train, with the porter at his heels carrying his traveling-bag, he became dimly conscious of the fact that he was creating a great sensation, but was entirely at a loss to account for it. Then, when he had taken a corner seat, he could not help noticing that quite a number of people passed and repassed the window, stealthily glancing at him meanwhile. At last a porter came to look at the tickets, and he seemed hardly able to restrain his laughter.

"Whatever is the matter with you and all the people, my man?" asked the bishop.

"They want to know," was the response, in West-country dialect, "ave 'ee been and left the lady behind, zur?"

"What?" exclaimed the astonished bishop.

Then his eyes fell on the side of the bag which the porter turned round on the seat before him. There, glued to it, was a wide strip of white satin ribbon, on which was painted in large letters:

"Married this morning."

One of the jocular guests at the wedding had mistaken the bishop's traveling-bag for that of the bridegroom!

A WASTED SALUTE

Naval Powder, Pomp and Splendor and a Fizzle.

A SURPRISE FOR FARRAGUT.

The Admiral, With His Assembled Staff, Was Under the Impression That He Was About to Greet a Military Guest, but He Was Mistaken.

A group of officers were "swapping" stories at the Army and Navy club in Washington one night when one was reminded of an amusing incident that occurred in connection with the stay of the flagship Mopongabeia at Pensacola bay when Farragut was on board. The old fighter had been very busy the week before paying official calls on the mainland, and among those who had entertained him was General Canby. When, therefore, word was received that the general would visit the ship the next day the admiral was determined to have everything in readiness to receive him in a style becoming his rank.

The old boat was scrubbed and holystoned from stem to stern, the brass work was given an extra rub, and things generally were put into the best of order. The captain of the marines had a special inspection of his company, and not a spot of rust or a dull helmet spike escaped his notice. When night closed in darkness settled down over a very clean ship and a very tired ship's company.

Bright and early the next morning the admiral's launch was sent off to bring the general aboard. At the last moment it was discovered that there was no fruit for luncheon, and Pomp, the admiral's cook, was sent in the dinghy to get some.

Pomp was a character in his way and had been with the admiral for many years. He was very proud of what he called his military bearing and wore his beard carefully trimmed to a point. His hair and beard were nearly white, and, although he was sixty years old, he ruled the other negroes with a rod of iron.

By 10 o'clock every one was standing by in full dress, when the quartermaster came aft and reported that the admiral's launch was returning. The officer of the deck walked to the rail and took a squint at the boat through his glasses. A man clad in blue uniform was seated in the admiral's cane chair in the stern, but as the gunwale struck him just below his shoulder and the awning hid his head the officer of the deck was not certain that it was General Canby until as the wind lifted the edge of the awning he caught a glimpse of a gray beard.

Word was passed that the general was coming. The crew were beat to quarters, the marine guard paraded, and the gun squad, detailed to fire the salute, took their stations. Everything was in readiness, and the admiral and his staff stood at the head of the gangway to receive the guest. A hush of expectancy settled over the ship.

The boat drew nearer. Just as the launch scraped alongside, boom, boom, came the salute from the guns.

"Present arms!" came the command to the guard, and at a sign from the flag officer the band struck up "Hail to the Chief."

Amid all this military pomp and splendor the occupant of the launch was slowly clambering, feet foremost, and just as the last gun was fired he

A Richibucto School Teacher

Once a Dyspeptic—Now Well, Thanks to Father Morrissey's No. 11.

Richibucto, N. B., Nov. 17th 1909. Father Morrissey Med. Co., Ltd.,

I have been teaching school for upwards of thirty years, during the last twenty-five of which I have suffered seriously with stomach trouble, indigestion and dyspepsia.

I have tried many remedies, and while I would get temporary relief from some of them, yet the old trouble would return, and with it the sufferings only known to the chronic dyspeptic.

Last year I had made up my mind to abandon my profession, feeling that in my condition I could neither do justice to myself or to the many pupils under my charge. A friend suggested to me that I try Father Morrissey's No. 11 Stomach Tablets; I did so, and have continued to use them with the result that my stomach trouble is cured—my indigestion and dyspepsia gone and I feel as well as I ever did.

I have, thanks to the Tablets, been able to continue in my profession, and feel that I am once more enjoying my work and am able to give justice to the fifty-four pupils under my care.

Yours Gratefully,

(Signed) MARY CHRYSAL.

Are you one of the many thousands who, like Miss Chrysal, are prevented from doing their best work, or really enjoying life, by stomach trouble?

If you are you cannot do better than she did—take Father Morrissey's No. 11 Tablets.

Each No. 11 Tablet, when dissolved in the stomach, will digest 1½ pounds of food—a good, hearty meal—so that no matter how weak your stomach may be No. 11 Tablets will enable you to get the nourishment out of your food and build up your strength, while the stomach, thus relieved, recovers its vigor.

stood erect at the top of the gangway. It was the admiral's cook with a bag of fruit in each hand! The honors intended for a general had been rendered to old Pomp! As the situation dawned on the men even discipline could not check a general shout of laughter. The old admiral himself laughed until he could laugh no longer.

It seemed that in some way the dinghy had gone off and left the old negro and that he managed to convince the coxswain that "Marse Farragut was jest bound to have dat fruit befo' the general came."

Pomp wanted to land at the port gangway, but the coxswain insisted that the admiral's launch never went to the port side and that the old man would have to land on the starboard side, aft. Had the awning been a little higher the mistake in identification would not have occurred. As things were, no one could be blamed, and the affair was treated as a joke, while the old cook was nicknamed the "General."

When an hour later General Canby did come he was received with all due ceremony and on being told the story laughed until the tears rolled down his cheeks and demanded to see the man who had stolen his salute.—New York Press.

AN ADDRESS.

The following address was delivered by Mr. J. S. Madill at Port Hope last week:

Layman's Association, Bay of Quinte Conference.

Dear Brethren:—

How truly we may say: Seasons and months and weeks and [days].

Demand successive songs of praise; Still be the cheerful homage paid With opening light and evening [shade].

We have, through the goodness and mercy of an all-wise Providence been permitted to again assemble here in Conference and to take up the work of the church as it devolves upon us.

Another year of service has passed into history, and our duty as laymen is too look out upon the future and endeavor to plan with careful forethought wisely and well for the welfare of the church.

A number of important questions will come before you, chief of which will be the question of church union. This will demand our most careful judgment and ripest thought to arrive at a proper solution of the question as to acceptance of the basis proposed. To my mind at no period in history has a matter of such great magnitude been presented to the churches concerned, it is the burning question for the consideration of our present Conference gathering and it will be for us, in conjunction with the clergy, to decide if it will be in the best interests of the church to take an advanced step in regard to the proposals already formulated.

During the past year the Parliament of the Church (our General Conference) was held in the city of Victoria, B. C., the entertainment being with true Western hospitality.

Some changes were made in disciplinary measures and modes of procedure, but the disposition, evidently was to avoid change for change sake. Doubtless the new appointments for Quarterly Boards will vindicate the judgment of the Conference.

Our Bay of Quinte Conference was ably represented by the admirable delegation elected at the last annual Conference gathering under the leadership of our esteemed and honored President, Rev. W. H. Emsley.

Another matter of importance to which I would call your attention is our duty to our ministers as regards their financial support. This matter was most ably presented by the ex-president of this Association last year in his admirable address and has since been crystallized into General Conference legislation (see Journal of Gen. Conference, Salaries Report, page 404.) and Discipline, par. 254, so that this laymen's meeting must realize that the time has come when this matter is no longer optional or a mere matter of grace but the church as a whole must take a broader and more liberal view along these lines and the statement must cease that whilst a number of our charges are paying liberal salaries, the records go to show the greater number are still not measuring up to their ability to meet their proper and just obligation.

And here I would beg to call attention of all Official Members of the Church to the importance of attending all Board and other financial meetings, as by this means a better knowledge of the different organizations of the church and their financial standing will be assured and a more healthy interest will be manifested in the broad schemes and purpose of the church as a whole.

May I venture to commend these few suggestions to your serious consideration and in closing refer with great gratification to the advances made in Missionary extension and givings—during the past two years an increase of over $61,000, for 1909-10, is owing largely to the earnest co-operation and effort on the part of the laymen who have actively associated themselves with this mighty movement.

In conclusion, brethren, I thank you

I was given a sample package of three Hennequin Tablets; we used them; I saw a change at once. We secured the Tablets and our baby improved every day, and is now a bright, fat, good natured boy; you could not believe he was the same child. They certainly cured my baby and saved his life. I believe them to be the best medicine ever sold for babies. Mothers if your babies are not well take my advice and try these Tablets.—Mrs. JAMES RINDELL, Barrydale, Ont.

Music of the Drum.

All musical authorities have agreed that when used in a proper way the drum is thoroughly musical. The common snare or side drum is freely used in musical composition. A large number of drummers performing simultaneously out of doors produce good music. In this connection Berlioz, the composer, pointed out that a sound that was insignificant when heard singly, such as the clink of one or two muskets at shoulder arms or the thud as the butt comes to the ground at ground arms, becomes brilliant and attractive if performed by a thousand men together.

Crumpled Them.

We observe that the man's fingers are all twisted and bent into the most uncouth shapes.

"No," our friend explains. "He is deaf and dumb and has been trying to talk Scotch dialect on his fingers."—Life.

In conclusion, brethren, I thank you for the honor you have done me, and thro' me, the Western Church in Napanee from whence you have been pleased this year to elect both President of Conference and President of Lay Association; by appointing me to the office which I now lay down—may I say it has been a special pleasure to be thus associated with you and in retiring I feel confident that the same wise counsels which have prevailed in the past will continue to do so along broader and still more energetic lines to the upbuilding of the church, and we may truly adopt the inspired language of the great Methodist hymn writer—

Make haste O man to do Whatever must be done.

Thy day will soon be gone.

Getting the Exact Spot.

An emergency call from a policeman for a tape measure kept two women waiting in the dressmaker's parlor for five minutes. There were other tape measures there which the dressmaker might have used, but she was too busy pondering the circumstance that had suddenly converted her into an ally of the police department. Presently the policeman returned the tape. "What did you want it for?" she asked.

"To help find the right place to shoot a horse with a broken leg," he said. "The vital spot is just three inches above that little swirl in his forehead where a dozen crowns seem to meet. I am not very good at guessing, so we thought it safest to find the exact spot with a tape measure."—New York Sun.

WILD WEATHER IN MONTH OF JUNE

Prof. Hicks Foresees All Sorts of Things for the Coming Month; Rain, Followed by Drouth.

Rev. Irl Hicks' predictions for the month of June are as follows:

A regular storm period covers the first six days of June. The Mercury and Venus periods also bear upon and intensify disturbances at this period. The crisis of these storms will fall on and touching the 4th and 5th. A low barometer, high temperature and humidity may be put down as foreshadowing severe storms at this time. Rising barometer and change to fair and much cooler weather will pass eastwardly over the country from the 6th to 9th.

A reactionary storm period will bring decided storm conditions on and touching the 9th, 10th, 11th and 12th. At this period we enter into the June solstice disturbances. The solstice period extends from the 10th to the end of June. The full moon on the 11th falls at the central day of the annual magnetic and electric crisis. Within three days of sunset on the 11th, a maximum of magnetic and electric storms will visit many wide extremes of the earth, attended by phenomenal "earth currents" much volcanic unrest and violent seismic shocks.

A regular storm period extends from the 13th to the 17th, being at the crisis of the Mercury period and under full strain of the solstice and the Venus periods. Daily thunder storms, with an excess of electricity, wind, rain and hail may be expected. Change to very much cooler will follow about the 18th to 19th.

A reactionary storm period will make itself severely felt on and touching the 20th, 21st and 22nd. This period is at the exact centre of the summer solstice and great electrical manifestations will mark this period. In all this part of the month we may look for an excess of lightning all round the heavens, in early evenings and through the nights.

A regular storm period is central on the 26th, the new moon falling on the same day, moon being in perigee and at greatest north declination. In every probability this will prove one of the most decisive periods of disturbance during the month. The barometer should be consulted with care as we enter this period, and if it falls to very low reading—a result to be expected—storms of violent character should be apprehended. All storms during the last half of June will be erratic in character—will move in directions out of the ordinary, often doubling back over their tracks after they have supposedly passed off to the east. We believe there will be too much rain in June, for best agricultural interests, except in New England states, and the extreme southern and south-western sections. A marked seismic period is central on the 26th, covering the 23rd to the 29th.

As we pass out of June we believe that dryness and drouth will pinch most parts of the country through the remaining part of the summer, into the late autumn.

Beware of Ointments for Catarrh that Contain Mercury.

As mercury will surely destroy the sense of smell and completely derange the whole system when entering it through the mucous surfaces. Such articles should never be used except on prescriptions from reputable physicians, as the damage they will do is ten fold to the good you can possibly derive from them. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, O., contains no mercury and is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. In buying Hall's Catarrh Cure be sure you get the genuine. It is taken internally and made in Toledo, Ohio, by F. J. Cheney & Co. Testimonials free.

Sold by Druggists. Price 75c per bottle. Take Hall's Family Pills for constipation.

THE CURSE OF THE NATION IS CONSTIPATION

"Fruit-a-tives" Alone Cures This Disease

A famous scientist states that Constipation, or non-action of the bowels, causes more deaths than all other diseases combined. Constipation inflames the Kidneys, ruins digestion, is the foundation of Rheumatism, poisons the blood, causes Headaches, Neuralgia, Nervousness and Insomnia.

Constipation is caused by a weak or sluggish liver. Bile, the only purgative of the body, is secreted by the liver, which in turn should pour out into the intestines sufficient bile to move the bowels. Unless the liver is active, there cannot be enough bile to move the bowels regularly, and Constipation is the result.

"Fruit-a-tives", the famous fruit medicine, will always cure Constipation because it acts directly on the liver—relieves the congestion—increases the quantity of bile—and strengthens the bowel muscles.

The funeral service of the late Mrs. Lawrence Sharpe, aged seventy-one years, was held at her son-in-law's, M. McDonald's, on Wednesday, of last week, and was conducted by an old and personal friend, Rev. G. S. White, Napanee. The remains were taken to Catarqui for burial. She leaves, beside her husband, two daughters and two sons: Mrs. George Bell, Belleville; Mrs. M. McDonald, Odesa; Edward, Bath, and Elinor, Hamilton. ## HER WEIGHT INCREASED FROM 100 TO 140 POUNDS.

Wonderful Praise Accorded Peruna the Household Remedy

Mrs. Maria Goertz, Oriens, Oklahoma, writes:

"My husband, children and myself have used your medicines, and we always keep them in the house in case of necessity. I was restored to health by this medicine, and Dr. Hartman's invaluable advice and books. People ask about me from different places, and are surprised that I can do all of my household work alone, and that I was cured by the doctor of chronic catarrh. My husband was cured of asthma, my daughter of earache and catarrh of the stomach, and my son of catarrh of the throat. When I was sick I weighed 100 pounds; now I weigh 140.

"I have regained my health again, and I cannot thank you enough for your advice. May God give you a long life and bless your work."

FLY CASTING FOR TROUT.

How to Become Proficient in Sport That Needs Patience.

Fly casting can no more be taught theoretically than can wing shooting, riding, skating, swimming, milking a cow or playing the violin. A few general hints in regard to casting as well as to the other accomplishments may, however, be useful to the beginner.

Hold the rod loosely. Watch some good caster and imitate him. The skillful caster is he who can quickly place his fly within the space of a handkerchief at a distance of fifty feet. Much longer casts are made, but this answers every practical purpose. When a fish has struck and is hooked, look out for him and keep your line taut as he leaps out of the water. The line is kept moderately tight by elevating the point of the rod.

Every caster should learn to use the rod with either hand, and no man is an expert who cannot do this. To say nothing of a sprained wrist and consequent loss of sport during the season or being obliged to cease fishing from fatigue and weakness of one hand, there are certain winds in some situations where a cast cannot be made with the right hand. Again, it is important to be able to cast a fly in the teeth of the wind, which, when properly done, often lifts the very best fish. It is not very difficult, but is very laborious and requires practice.

It is not accomplished by either the single or double turn, but is done by bringing the rod right up in front, avoiding, if possible, the wind taking the rod to the right or left. When the rod is almost straight press the butt strongly toward the body with the wrist, keeping the arm as close to the side as possible until the tip of the rod comes about three-quarters straight against or in the eye of the wind, and then turn the arm out directly forward, turning the wrist during the forward movement outside or toward the right side. By this mode, which is more easily done than described, the line, which should be only of manageable length, will unfold and display a pretty fair cast. At all events, the waves or turbulent state of the water will conceal the defective fall of the flies.

The wind, the sun and even the time of day are important factors in the success of the fly casters. Trout seldom rise to the fly just before rain.

referred. Why, no one knows. It is on record that a fly crawled up a window pane 32 times, returning each time a-winz.

Hens scratch for food with the sun behind them, the reason being that the rays reflect on the minute particles.

Cats seldom lie with their feet to the fire. Usually they lie on the left side. Dogs lie with their fore-paws to the fire.

A mouse will ignore a food supply sufficient for a meal and run great risks to nibble at a wholesale supply. It will hide at the source of food supply and not depart therefrom until actually disturbed. It isn't true that a mouse runs to its hole at the first alarm.

Find a harmless little snake the length of a lead pencil and provide a box for it in the house, visit it daily, and at the end of three months it will crawl to you for food.

Goldfish usually swim around a globe to the right. They can be taught to take a fly out of the hand in six weeks' time. The presence of other fish in the globe is generally ignored by goldfish. Drop a piece of chip on the surface of the water and it will frighten a fish.

Interesting Relics.

Mrs. Brown and Mrs. Jones are dear friends personally, and the only little tiffs that ever mar their cordial relations are over the merits and attainments of their respective husbands, each thinking her own masculine prize package about the cleverest thing that ever happened. Mrs. Jones generally manages to outdo Mrs. Brown in the quality of the feathers she puts in her hubby's cap, but the other day Mrs. Brown put one over on her astute friend that was a clincher.

"Oh, my dear," she gushed to Mrs. Jones in an ecstasy of delight, "I want to tell you. My husband is an enthusiastic archaeologist. And I never knew it till yesterday. I found in his desk some queer looking tickets with the inscription 'Mudhorse, 8 to 1.' And when I asked him what they were he explained to me that they were relics of a lost race. Isn't it interesting?"

A diary scribbled on a bit of paper with a charred twig has told all that will be known of the inspector and three constables of the royal northwest mounted police who froze to death last February on the way from Fort MacPherson to Dawson. Their story goes into a volume with many others—with that of the constable who took a prisoner up in the far north, handcuffed him, strapped him to a sled, and carried him back to punishment through weeks of travel in a frozen silence and solitude which unbalanced the reason of the desperado. At the frozen edge of an empire the inspector and his constables lost their way and their lives where only Indians, who walk out in the wastes as a city man walks in a park, have inherited knowledge and intuition to keep them safe. The relief expedition finds only corpses and a pitiful diary. Down on the baked edge of the empire other "policemen" patrol the shores of the Persian Gulf, with Afghan gun runners squatting back in the hills waiting for Arab dhows to escape surveillance and land rifles where they may be scooped up in a sudden raid.

A "policeman" with five weeks' furlough from this work and back in London—a naval lieutenant—gave a Daily Mail man an idea of what it is like: "We commissioned the old tub of a sloop at Plymouth—1,000 odd tons, with kennels for cabins and a cage for a mess; no ice machine (all the cold air we made went to freeze the cordite magazine); no electric lights between decks, and not even an electric fan. I tell you we frazzled by the time we reached Aden and thought of two years ahead on the worst possible of naval stations. I did three weeks once in a cutter. Lived and dressed as pirates. Our parent ship forgot all about us and we lived a week on dates and water. You shadow a big dhow for a month, bursting with arms, but she flies a foreign friendly flag and you can't breathe on her, but only pray that she'll dump the rifles somewhere and go away and leave the rest to you. But she doesn't. She goes back to Muscat in a temper and starts all over again. You nurse detached cutters up and down the most weird and barren coast Providence ever built. Take it from me, it's not worth three pounds a day, what with beri-beri and Bagdad boils."

Meanwhile other "policemen" are starting out for the mountains of Assam to find out why certain tribes of natives which knew enough to know better saw fit to kill an official and massacre his expedition.

THE EYE OF THE SOUL

What the Sight is to the Body the Instincts and Ideals are to the Soul

"If thine eye be single thy whole body shall be full of light."—Jesus.

The expression, "the single eye," is sometimes used with a ludicrous misunderstanding of the word as found in our King James version of the New Testament, where it is employed in its obsolete sense of "whole" or "healthy."

Well meaning people have expressed their wish to have "an eye single to God's glory," or to their duty, in which the idea is that of looking at one thing and not at two. The phrase in our Bible, however, simply refers to the advantages of having a good eye over having a bad or diseased eye.

The eye may be taken as the most practical and serviceable of all our organs. It puts us most in communication with the outside world. By it through one lens we range the ultimate stars; and, through another, we perceive the infinitesimal forms and motions of the cell world. What the eye is to the body the instincts and ideals are to the soul.

As all the things we learn by reason are small in their sum compared to the myriad things we learn through the glance; so the wisdom, virtue, commandments, creeds, and counsels we gather by instruction in the spirit, are small compared to that higher, quicker, more perfect, and we obtain by the direct sensing of one of our spiritual eye of feeling and appreciation.

If you want a book in a room upstairs and if you tell me to go and find it with my eyes shut, what numberless and minute directions you must give. I must take so many steps to the right and as many to the left, and guide myself by the hands passed along this and that object, and the like! Whereas, if you tell me to go with my eyes open and bring you the blue book lying on your dresser by the pin tray, I can find it a hundred times more easily and infallibly.

It is precisely the same in making one's moral way through life. A few sound instincts and clear ideals are better than reams of rules. No system of ethics, saturated with wisdom of antiquity, and approved by all the philosophers of earth, is of much practical use to a morally blind man.

The business of living a pure, true, and right life is, therefore, after all, a simple one, and not complex. Follow your deepest longings, heed your inner repulsions. Keep sound and sane and follow your nose.

There is more purity in the instinctive shrinking of a simple maid than in all the infinite manoeuvres of propriety. There is more worship in the child's wonder at the thunder and admiration before the flaming sunset than in all the formulas of heathen ceremonies or Christian ascriptions. There is more true repentance in the misery of an honest man at telling a lie or doing any mean action than in

THE LONGEST LITANIES.

It is not only human to err, it is just as human to feel sorry that we have erred. The nobler, finer instincts and ideals of life are as innate as original sin. Every man knows them.

It is when we cease obeying them instantly and begin arguing with them, that we fall into the sloughs of moral confusion.

And what Jesus came to do for us was not to guide us from without, but from within; not to give us objective, external laws to guide us, but to awaken in us a lambent guiding principle. He came "to open the eyes of the blind." His dynamic is not implicit obedience, but "perfect love."

This explains all that mystical sounding language of the New Testament that speaks of "Christ formed within," "I in you and you in me," "if any man will open the door I will come in and sup with him," and so forth. All of which means that Jesus' aim is to be an inspiration of the individual moral forces, an unkindling of personal perceptive powers, the awakening of the soul to its moral functioning.

No man, no teacher, not even Christ himself, can guide a man, so as to develop his manhood as well as keep him from harm, except such teacher or Christ enter into a man, by his personal influence, and strengthen and clear "the eye of the soul."

The messengers were mocked by the majority, but certain men of these apostate tribes (11), enough to make a multitude (18), repented of their backsliding, and accepted the invitation. In contrast to the scorn and stubbornness of the Jews of the north was the enthusiasm of the people of Judah, which led them to celebrate the feast with one heart, and in immense numbers (12).

THE CIRCUS CHILD

"My congratulations to you, my dear Spencer; my warmest congratulations. A fine old house away from London, a country seat, was the very thing you wanted. To those that have, you know, all things are given."

Old Mr. Courtney lifted his glass then drained it, and nodded his silver head, a beaming smile upon his features.

Arnold Spencer acknowledged the toast gravely, his handsome, serious face bearing a thoughtful expression.

The old lawyer gazed at him again, and his smile faded. A perplexed light dawned in his eyes.

"You have everything in the world," he continued; "good friends, good fortune, good health. Don't think me intrusive, nor yet prying; but—why can you find no satisfaction in your life? You have a foremost position at the Bar, a splendid and enjoyable position, and whilst you have struggled and been poor in the past, surely you can forget all that now. Can the remembrance be so bitter that the taste of it still lingers, poisoning the present?"

"Bitter?" Arnold Spencer gave a low sigh. "Listen. I have no quarrel with my good fortune, yet it is valueless to me—yes, valueless. Who is there to share it? Neither wife nor child."

"Ah!" Mr. Courtney wagged his head. "It's not impossible to remedy, my dear sir. Yours is not at all a hopeless case."

He uttered a short, mellow laugh that was abruptly checked, for his host had turned a white, haggard face in his direction, and had lifted his hand in an imperious gesture.

"A woman broke my heart once," he said, slowly and distinctly. "No woman shall ever have the power to break it again."

The lawyer pursed his lips.

"Ah! but time, you know—"

"She was my wife."

Mr. Courtney started, gazing at his friend in amazement.

"Your wife?" he repeated. "I was unaware that you were married. Does your wife yet live?"

"No; she is dead."

"But, my dear fellow, don't think me unfeeling, but is it impossible to forget a woman who is dead?"

"Impossible to forget the lesson I received. My wife was false to me. She ran away with a villain who had pretended to be my friend."

Mr. Courtney knit his brow annoyed with himself because he had pursued the subject.

"I am sorry, and more than sorry, to have touched upon an old sore," he murmured.

Then he rose from his chair, a fine old figure, a little bent, but a gentleman of the old school.

He took his leave, and Spencer watched him depart from that ancient City restaurant in silence. A bitter mood held him in thrall, a mood that he strove to dismiss, telling himself that he was a fool, and worse than that, not to be able to blot out from his mind and thus forget the sense of immeasurable loss that ever seized him when his are starting out for the mountains of Assam to find out why certain tribes of natives which knew enough to know better saw fit to kill an official and massacre his expedition.

An English authority is asserting that the impending shortage of coal and wood and iron supply of the world is sinking into significance when compared with the menace the world is sinking into significance of food. Some of the figures quoted from other authorities who have considered no more than the wheat crop in its relation to an increased and increasing population of the wheat consuming nations have at least the interest which attaches to huge figures. Maj. Craigie, for example, shows that the population of eastern and central Europe has increased from 167,000,000 to 267,000,000 within the last seventy years, while the wheat acreage has diminished within this territory. He says that in the first five years of the twentieth century Great Britain, Holland, Belgium, Germany, and Italy imported 400,000,000 bushels of wheat; one-half of it from Russia and the rest from other eastern countries. But the non-European countries contributing this wheat have tilled 15,000,000 acres in order to produce it, and the heavy cost of shipment has been added to its cost.

It is shown that while the yield of wheat in the United States has increased enormously, its population has increased to such proportions that that country has less and less wheat for export. Further, speaking of the new Canadian northwest, the authority suggests that if the wasteful methods of the United States are to be followed there, not even that virgin soil promises a long continued certainty of supply.

Two years ago Prof. Sylvanus Thompson showed that the wheat acreage of the world was 240,000,000, producing 3,000,000,000 bushels a year, and placing the per capita consumption at 4.5 bushels for the wheat consuming peoples. In round figures, therefore, the wheat production was sufficient for 600,000,000 people in 1909, while the professor's estimate of the wheat increase in 1921 would be only 11,000,000 bushels, while the population in that year would be 819,000,000 of wheat eaters. At the most, the argument against this early poverty in wheat foods is that with the increasing value of wheat lands the farmer will raise his average production to the acre through the automatic cutting down of his farm boundaries. As to the time when we shall be wheat hungry, however, there is no answer.

Text, I. Sam. 16. 7.

Verses 1-12—The invitation to the passover.

1. Israel . . . Ephraim and Manasseh—It will be seen from the preceding chapters that Hezekiah had made every provision for the return of the people of the city to the true worship. But now he is anxious to extend the good work. He wishes to reach out, not only into the provincial districts of Judah, but into the northern tribes as well. The tribes mentioned merely represent Israel, and are given to make it clear that the northern kingdom of Israel is meant.

To keep the passover—This great feast commemorating the deliverance of the Hebrew people from bondage to Egypt, was held beginning on the fourteenth of the month Nisan, the first month of the ecclesiastical year.

2. The king had taken counsel—Not with his priests, for they were not as yet reorganized, but with the princes and popular assembly. It was thus determined, for the reason given in the next verse, to keep the passover in the second month instead of the first, a notable irregularity for sticklers after ritualistic niceties. However, the law made the observance of the feast in the second month legitimate in certain cases. The people evidently accepted any opportunity with eagerness to return to the worship of Jehovah, after so many years of apostasy.

3. They could not keep it at that time—That is, in the first month. There was a twofold reason; first, because the priests had not completed the purification of the temple, and they themselves, therefore (presumably), remained unsanctified, or ceremonially unfit; secondly, the people, owing to the well-known unreadiness of the temple, failed to gather at Jerusalem.

5. From Beersheba even unto Dan—Indicating the limits of the undivided kingdom of David and Solomon. The northern Kingdom is regarded as having already fallen.

Had not kept it in great numbers—According to the law, "the whole assembly of the congregation of Israel" were to observe this feast, but only a few had done so.

6. Posts—Couriers from the royal guards.

6-9. Ye children of Israel, turn again—Addressed to the apostate tribes of the northern kingdom. Hezekiah goes on to show that their brethren had been carried away in captivity into an alien land because they had deserted the worship of Jehovah in his house. But now, if this remnant, who have escaped out of the hand of Shalmaneser and Sargon, the kings of Assyria, through whom Samaria fell, will return to their God, not only shall they themselves avoid calamity but their brethren shall come again into their own land, and the compassion of a gracious God shall be visited upon them. Some take this to refer to the invasion of Tiglath-pileser, whose ravages of the northern countries took place some ten years before. But the chronology is very difficult here, and the great captivity better agrees with the language employed.

10. Even unto Zebulun—The use of these names is doubtless general and rhetorical. Some of the northern tribes had passed out of history, owing to the depredations and deand immense numbers (12).

13-17.—The celebration of the passover.

13. Feast of unleavened bread—Properly, a feast following the celebration of the passover (Ex. 12. 1-13), but here, as in the New Testament, treated as identical with the other. They came to be regarded as one feast.

14. The altars—After the priests had cleansed the temple, it became necessary to remove the other marks of the idolatrous condition of the city under Ahaz, and this the people themselves accomplished. Read also 2 Kings 18. 4.

15. Priests and Levites were ashamed—They had been remiss (2 Chron. 29. 34), but now the zeal of the laity stirs them to a sense of their duty.

17. The Levites had the charge of killing the passovers—According to the Mosaic law all the congregation slay the paschal lamb (that is, each householder his own lamb). But on this occasion the Levites took charge of the slaying of the lambs, owing to the unclean condition of the people (they having been living in open idolatry). Had these lambs been killed and their blood received by persons unsanctified, the sacrificial blood would have become defiled. Compare the passover celebrated by Josiah (2 Chron. 35. 11), and also Ezra 6. 19, 20. This was otherwise than it is written (18), but it was considered better to break the letter of the law in this case than to deprive the people of the opportunity to keep the spirit of the law.

20. Healed the people—Forgave them. Their ceremonial transgression is regarded as a disease to be removed by a healing remedy. Possibly physical sickness is meant (Lev. 15. 31).

23. Other seven days—A similar two-weeks festival was held at the completion of Solomon's temple, but came before the regular feast. This prolongation of the celebration was made possible by the gift of bullocks and sheep by Hezekiah and the princes (24), and by the fact that many priests arose to the occasion and sanctified themselves, so that the offerings could be properly handled.

25. Sojourners—Those proselytes from both kingdoms who, with the people of Judah and those from the northern kingdom, made up the crowd of participants at the feast. They were of foreign descent (Ex. 12. 19, 48).

26. The time of Solomon—Compare 2 Chron. 7. The dedication had been a great occasion; for 250 years there had been nothing to equal it.

cient City restaurant in silence. A bitter mood held him in thrall, a mood that he strove to dismiss, telling himself that he was a fool, and worse than that, not to be able to blot out from his mind and thus forget the sense of immeasurable loss that ever seized him when his thoughts wandered back to the woman whose presence had once given radiance to his life.

And then had come the unexpected blow—that elopement with his friend, Wilson Leigh, and the tragedy that had so swiftly followed the guilty pair in their flight; the motor accident a few hours later, in which both had been instantly killed, their car wrecked, the unhappy victims terribly mangled—a frightful catastrophe.

Impatiently Spencer got up to his feet, and returning to his chambers tried to induce a more cheerful train of thought.

But it was useless, and he decided that he would seek change of scene upon the morrow. Yes, he would go down to Craston, where this property that had been bequeathed to him by a distant kinsman was situated.

The following evening—a clear, fine night—Spencer was standing on the terrace of his new home, attracted there by the sound of distant music, which floated up to him. For a moment he wondered what it signified. Then he recollected that the housekeeper, a garrulous old dame, had informed him that a circus was visiting the village.

With a smile at the impulse Spencer decided to witness a performance, and with this intention he strolled away from the Hall. His footsteps brought him at length to the huge canvas theatre, and he took his seat within. There was a fair-sized ring, with a great deal of draperies and bunting, and it was plain that the rustic audience was awaiting the performance with intense expectancy.

Presently, with a loud "Houp-la," the clown bounded in the ring. Then commenced a wordy warfare between him and the ring-master, which was ended by the appearance of a string of horses, these being put through certain evolutions.

A cream-colored steed now came on with a drum-saddle, and standing upon this was a small, fairy-like creature, a girl of about eight, but who, with her spangles and her gauze, might, indeed, have floated in upon a cloud from some other world than this. She was so small, so frail, so airy, that the people gasped before they clapped their hands in welcome; a fairy-elf that had come from the land of dreams, a little maid who appealed to every heart, with her hair yellow as buttercups, and eyes that resembled stars, wide-opened, vivid with emotion.

The clown and the ring-master had ceased their jesting, and were silent.

Arnold Spencer sat back in his seat, white-faced, with staring gaze, his soul shaken by some tremendous emotion. He told himself he must be dreaming, or, if not, why here before him was a child with the face of his dead wife—a lovely miniature of herself—the resemblance salient, striking, wonderful.

The child had ridden round the ring once or twice throwing herself into pretty poses, more spontaneous and less stereotyped than is usual in such exhibitions. But now she halted, and the audience grew hushed and more eagerly attentive. Obviously she was about to perform some difficult feat.

Arnold Spencer held his breath. Something told him, some instinct divined the fact that the little artist was nervous, or else not feeling equal to her task. The smile was still upon the angel face, but the little lips were trembling, and the flush upon the baby cheeks was too bright for mere excitement.

A crack of the whip and the sober old circus horse began to trot round the ring, with its tiny rider posturing upon its back. The clown at one side, his banter stopped and the grin upon his face a little strained, held out a paper-hoop. Seraphine, as the child was billed, approached it, the clown cried out "Hoop-la," in a voice that seemed to hold a quiver in it, and leaping lightly as a sylph the child jumped through. But either she misjudged the distance or the horse increased its pace, for she failed to regain the saddle and fell down to the ground, a cry of terror breaking from the audience.

Rising abruptly from his seat, Spencer pushed forward, striving to make his way through the throng that had already gathered there. But he was pushed back by the ring-master, and he saw that the clown had gathered the child up in his arms and was making his way out of the ring, with the circus performers keeping back the crowd from following, and Spencer was shut out with the rest.

A few moments later the ring-master came back with a reassuring smile on his face, and announced that Mam'zelle Seraphine was merely a little bruised and not at all seriously hurt.

The audience appeared satisfied, and settled down to witness the remainder of the performance; but Spencer did not stay. He strode back to his own home through the cold air, wondering—wondering.

He was early astir the next morning, intending to make inquiries concerning little Seraphine. But, early as he was, the circus people had been earlier, and, like the Arab, had folded their tents and stolen away.

A thousand conjectures ran riot in his brain. One thing was very certain—he would have no rest until he had learned everything there was to be known about Mam'zelle Seraphine.

It was not a very difficult matter to get upon the track of the circus troupe. They had made for a town twenty miles away, and a couple of hours later Spencer was also there.

Signs of activity met his gaze on every side when he reached the meadow where the circus had established itself. At one of the caravans, the largest and most picturesque of them all, he rapped with his knuckles.

Some minutes elapsed before the door was opened, and then the tousled head of an untidy woman peered forth. She was elderly, and had a kindly, good-humored face, and listened civilly when Spencer stated that he wished to know if the little girl had been injured in yesterday's mishap.

"If you'll wait a minute of two, sir, I'll slip on my cloak and ask Seraphine's mother how the child is. It was only a sprain, sir, nothing else; scarcely that, indeed. The child kicked her foot in falling. We were sorry for the accident; she's a real draw is the child, a genuine favorite of the ring. The ly a few brief minutes at his command. Mme. Celeste was about to commence her act, and at the end of it was certain to return to her caravan and to the child she had left unguarded there during her absence.

The door was locked closely—Spencer had tried it—but it was a simple matter to force back the window-bolt, and now, gaining a foothold upon one wheel, he had it open, and was listening to that tender, plaintive voice.

"Little girl! Seraphine!" He answered that cry, dreading as he did so that he would alarm the child.

"Who is there? Who are you?" There was no fear at all in the question.

"I am a friend," he replied; "your friend, dear; and I am here to ask you some questions. You must tell me the truth, dear, and have no fear, for I am going to help, I hope, and take you away from this life."

"Oh, do—oh, do!" The words came, broken by a sob. "Take me to my mamma, my own dear mamma."

Spencer did not betray his surprise. Indeed, in some unaccountable manner he had divined that the child was never Mme. Celeste's. His present action was the outcome of that belief.

"Where did you leave your mamma?" he asked.

"Oh, ever so far away. In France—yes, it was over the sea. She was very ill—very, very ill, and mother—I mean Mme. Celeste—she whips me when I forget to call her mother—"

She broke off into sudden tears. "It is my own dear mother that I want, and she must want her little Miriam." He started this time. His wife's name! This child with his wife's face, and his wife's voice, was called by her name as well. Again he asked what could it mean? But there was no time to stay and question now. From the circus tent he heard the sound of clapping; Mme. Celeste's performance was receiving its due tribute.

"Your mother's name, little one, and where was this place in France? Can you remember?"

"Her name? Brendon; we were called Brendon, and it was Paris; yes, that was the place."

"I will save you from this hateful life, my dear little Miriam. Not this week, perhaps, nor yet the next; but don't think I shall forget, and not a word to Mme. Celeste."

He shut the window again, then strode quietly away, vanishing almost at the very moment when Mme. Celeste, her performance concluded, reached the caravan steps.

* * * * *

A Mrs. Brendon, an Englishwoman, residing in Paris, was not a difficult person to trace, when gold was lavishly used for the purpose. A week later Spencer was mounting the many stairs of an old-fashioned apartment house, that led to the fifth storey, where he paused outside a closed door. He rapped gently, and a voice, low and sad, yet so familiar to him, replied. Heaven, did he dream it, or had the grave given up its dead, and was it Miriam who had spoken?

He could not open the door at once, but at last he turned the handle and entered.

Notes of Particular Interest to Women Folks

GOOD THINGS TO EAT.

To make a fine olive salad, mince one tablespoonful of olives stuffed with red peppers, add to one cake of cream cheese. Rub to a cream, spread between two slices of brown or entire wheat bread which has been buttered and cut very thin.

Here is a new spinach dish: Press all the liquid from a cupful of cooked and chopped spinach. Repeat it with two tablespoonfuls of butter, two of flour and one of cream, and season it with salt, pepper, sugar and mace. Beat two eggs thoroughly and add them to the spinach. Take it from the fire and when cool enough shape it into balls with buttered spoons. Place these in boiling water and boil gently for five minutes, then drain them. Make a cream sauce, and while it is cooking put in the spinach balls.

To make a fine dish of browned potatoes, peel and boil large potatoes, place in a pan, dredge with flour, pour about two teaspoonfuls of melted butter over each potato, sprinkle with salt, brown in a hot oven serve with gravy.

Gooseberries will soon be ripe. They are a fine fruit, and should be used to a greater extent. A good pudding can be made as follows: Fill a pudding dish one-half full of gooseberries, add sugar and a little water. Spread over the berries the following batter: One cup flour, one teaspoon baking powder, salt, one egg, one tablespoon butter, one-half cup milk. Bake a nice brown in the oven; do not bake too quickly or the berries will not cook. Serve with sauce.

To make a mutton haricot with macaroni and peas, cut three pounds of breast mutton in pieces, roll in flour and brown in drippings; transfer to a stewpan, add two onions sliced, cover with boiling water and simmer one hour; add a rounding teaspoonful of salt and continue to simmer until very tender; add one quart of macaroni, previously boiled in salted water, and one quart of peas (canned); simmer a few minutes longer until vegetables are hot and serve. The vegetables may be served around the meat on the platter and the gravy thickened a very little and served separately.

The following is considered a very fine recipe for sweet pickled peaches: Select firm yellow peaches and scald them in strong soda water, then throw them in a large vessel of cold water, and with a dry, coarse towel rub off the fur. To one pound of fruit allow one gill of vinegar, one teaspoonful of the following mixed spices: Cloves, mace and sugar. Boil together until the peaches are tender. Then remove them and let the syrup boil until thoroughly cooked. Pour hot over the peaches. When cool, cover the jars.

Another peach recipe is "peaches in jelly." Open a quart can of whites of the eggs stiffly beaten. Pour the mixture into two pie tins lined with pastry. Bake for 40 minutes. Beat up three whites of egg stiffly, add one heaping tablespoonful of sugar and beat again, then spread over the top of pies, set in oven and brown.

Make a soufflé custard pudding by mixing one-half of a cupful of flour, a pinch of salt and two tablespoonfuls of sugar to a paste with a little cold milk. Turn this quickly into a pint of scalding-hot milk on the fire, and stir rapidly until very thick and smooth. Cover and cook for 10 minutes, then add two tablespoonfuls of butter cut into bits and the beaten yolks of five eggs. Stir for a moment longer, then cover and set aside for 10 minutes. Whip the whites to a stiff froth and cut them into the partly cooled custard; then bake in a well-greased pudding dish placed in a pan of hot water or in cups. Have the oven very hot and serve at once, as it quickly falls.

Two ways of making mustard: When a very mild flavor is liked, use cream or milk instead of water. Make only a small quantity, as it doesn't keep very long. A salt-spoonful of salt added to a table-spoonful of mustard not only improves the flavor, but also prevents it from going dry.

To cook chicken "Creole" way, cook four teaspoonfuls of butter with one-half shallot, finely chopped, five minutes, stirring constantly. Onion may be used if shallot is not at hand. Add five tablespoonfuls of flour and stir until well brown, then pour gradually, while stirring constantly, three-fourths of a cupful each of chicken stock and stewed and strained tomatoes. Bring to the boiling point, season with one teaspoonful of salt and one-eighth of a teaspoonful of paprika. Add one and one-half cupfuls of cooked chicken or fowl cut in small cubes, and let stand 10 or 15 minutes in the top of the double boiler that the meat may absorb some of the sauce.

TWO FRUIT RECIPES.

Often at this time of the year the housewife has still a few jars of preserved fruit on hand. She and her family are heartily sick of "sauce." Try this plan of making two delicious desserts from one quart jar of peaches. Preserved strawberries, cherries, etc., are equally good to use. Separate the peaches from the juice.

Recipe No. 1.—Rub the peaches to a pulp through a sieve. Add a half cupful of sugar if the fruit is not very sweet. Whip a pint of cream stiff. Mix well with the peach pulp and turn into two one-pound empty baking powder cans. Cover with oiled paper (the paper from cracker boxes is good to use) and press cover on tightly. Bury the cans in finely chopped ice and rock salt (equal portions) for two hours. This Seraphine's mother now the child is. It was only a sprain, sir, nothing else; scarcely that, indeed. The child kicked her foot in falling. We were sorry for the accident; she's a real draw is the child, a genuine favorite of the ring. The takings will fall off marvellously until she's able to perform again, and that's a matter of consequence to me, sir, since I and my old man own this show."

"Then it is Mrs. Jarrington whom I am addressing?"

"The same, sir."

"There would be no harm in my suggesting to you, I hope, that I thought the child was timid—nervous of her task?"

But Mrs. Jarrington shook her head in vigorous protest.

"The child is devoid of fear in the usual way," she declared. Then she lowered her voice a little.

"The fact is, sir, the child's mother has a vile temper, and sometimes Seraphine knows it."

Spencer turned away, with a pang of pity beating in his heart.

After retiring for a few moments Mrs. Jarrington came forth again, her shoulders adorned with an extraordinary cloak of magenta hue, trimmed lavishly with superb rabbit skin.

Motioning Spencer to follow, she proceeded to another caravan, and in answer to her summons a shrill voice called out, demanding to know who it was.

With a whimsical glance in Spencer's direction Mrs. Jarrington made some pacific response, and after a further parley the door was cautiously opened and a woman's handsome, but ill-tempered, face peered out.

The scowl died away at the sight of that well-dressed figure standing at Mrs. Jarrington's side, and she stared at him with eyes filled with suspicion.

Spencer recognized her instantly for the "lady equestrienne" of the previous night.

"I wanted to inquire for your little girl," he said, stepping forward and addressing her courteously.

Her startled gaze relaxed, and she uttered a short laugh.

"Oh, do you? And who may you be, I should like to know, and what is your object in spying round here?"

"Hush, hush, Mme. Celeste!" interposed the old show-woman, throwing a deprecating glance towards Spencer. "This gentleman witnessed Seraphine's accident, and feared the child was injured."

"Oh, well, she wasn't, and that you could have told him yourself. She won't show up at the next performance, so he needn't wait, and that's all I'm going to say."

She slammed the door, leaving her auditors, one gasping indignantly at her rudeness, the battle-light kindling in her own eyes, and the other standing in an attitude of profound reflection.

An idea had suddenly entered his mind, impossible, perhaps, in these prosaic days. Yet he was unable to dismiss it, and it gave shape and design to a purpose that seemed to have twin-birth with it."

"Mamma—oh, I want my mamma!"

The sweet, high-pitched voice reached Spencer, and for a moment a smart of tears came into his eyes.

There was such a note of sadness, of yearning in those tones, pathetic to hear in a child.

He gave a glance up at the dead, and was it Miriam who had spoken?

He could not open the door at once, but at last he turned the handle and entered.

Seated in the window, with the winter light beating upon her face, was a woman, older than she whom he had once called wife, yet still almost divinely beautiful.

Her eyes shone starlike out of the pallor of her face, and she uttered a sharp cry and bent back a little, shrinking away, her attitude one of overwhelming surprise.

"Miriam!" He spoke her name in a low, husky voice, scarcely daring to advance a step further. "Is it you, my wife; oh, is it you?"

She bowed her head.

"I hoped that you would never know that I still lived," she murmured, in tremulous tones. "What was the good? I had taken an irrevocable step, in ignorance and innocence, meaning to leave you free—free as you wished to be."

He stared at her in bewildered fashion.

"I—I do not understand."

"You—you were wary of me. I—I felt it, I was convinced; and Wilson Leigh confirmed my doubts when he told me the truth—the truth you had confided in him."

"The truth?" He repeated her words; he was beginning to understand.

"Yes; that you regretted your marriage with a girl so young and wayward as myself. I asked him was there no way in which I could free you, for I was bitterly hurt, bitterly wounded. He told me there was one, and only one—by leaving you. I only half understood what he meant; I was but a girl, scarcely more than a child, and I regarded him as a brother."

"Do you mean that you never cared for him?"

"I never loved him, nor did I know until later that he was so wicked as to care for me."

"But, Miriam, who was the woman, his companion in that last fateful ride—the woman we thought was yourself?"

"She was a girl—a school-friend—whom I met at the first hotel where we rested, whilst some repairs were being done to the car. It was she to whom I explained it all. It was she who saved me. She opened my eyes to Leigh's base designs, and suggested that I should remain there, leaving her to take my place in the car, disguised by a thick veil, thus leaving me free to escape from Wilson Leigh, whom I had already begun to fear and distrust. The plan was carried out, and the tragic result you know."

Spencer passed a hand over his brow.

"Miriam, why did you not come back to me?"

"How could I—oh, how could I? Could you have believed my innocence, especially when I was told you had confessed you were tired of me? Yet there was a reason, perhaps, that should have made me conquer my pride."

His heart began to beat again with thick throbs.

"Miriam, was it our child—yours and mine?"

She threw a startled glance at him.

"How did you know?"

"First tell me, is it by your knowledge that she is performing in a circus?"

She sprang to her feet, her eyes dilated with alarm.

"What do you mean? I had been til the peaches are tender. Then remove them and let the syrup boil until thoroughly cooked. Pour hot over the peaches. When cool, cover the jars.

Another peach recipe is "peaches in jelly." Open a quart can of peaches, remove the pieces of fruit and strain the syrup. Measure and add water, if necessary, to make two cupfuls and a half. If not quite sweet enough, heat slightly and add sugar to taste; then stir in a scant half package of gelatin which has been soaked in a half cupful of cold water. Pour a half inch in a wetted mold and place on ice until firm; add a layer of the fruit, either whole or cut, with enough more of the liquid jelly to cover and again put aside until firm, keeping the remainder of the jelly in a warm place, where it will not stiffen. Repeat until the materials are used, then set away until firm. Serve with plain or whipped cream.

In making grape jelly, which you will be doing before very long, use in this proportion: One-third apples to two-thirds grapes. Use grapes that are part green and part ripe; they make the best jelly. Cover apples with water, cook until tender (need not remove peeling; to the grapes add just enough water to keep from sticking. Drain the fruit, but do not squeeze; use equal parts of juice and sugar; needs only a few moments' cooking longer. This makes a perfect jelly, and it will not granulate, a fault with grape jelly. When cool cover with melted paraffin.

Does the kidlet ever get tired of molasses cake? Here is a good recipe: Two ounces of butter, one pound of molasses, one pound of flour, one tablespoonful ground ginger, pearlash size of a nut, small piece of alum. Melt the butter, add molasses, pour among flour, ginger, pearlash and alum. Beat mixture till very smooth. Leave it to get cold, roll out thin, cut into long pieces and bake in a moderate oven for 25 minutes.

And then there is good old "molasses pie," which fits in when fruit fails. Beat the yolks of four eggs with one cupful of brown sugar, add one cupful of molasses and two teaspoonfuls of grated nutmeg, then add two tablespoonfuls of melted butter, two heaping tablespoonfuls of cornstarch, mixed with three tablespoonfuls of cream, and the ill, and she, too, was ailing in this dead city air, where my work compels me to remain, so I found a good home in a sweet English village, with a kind, motherly woman who— But what do you mean?" she repeated, breaking off abruptly.

"Only that this kind, motherly woman has apparently taken advantage of your distant residence to lease the child to a circus performer."

She came across to him, trembling and painfully agitated.

"Arnold—Arnold, rescue my child for me; for Heaven's sake do this! I am a woman, powerless, but you—oh, you will not visit my follies upon our child!"

All was forgotten in that moment. She was but a mother whose child was in peril.

He took her in his arms.

"Miriam, Wilson Leigh lied to you. I loved you then as I love you now, as I shall always love you. Come, my dearest wife, let us seek our child together."—London Tit-Bits.

and turn into two one-pound empty baking powder cans. Cover with oiled paper (the paper from cracker boxes is good to use) and press cover on tightly. Bury the cans in finely chopped ice and rock salt (equal portions) for two hours. This serves seven or eight people.

Don't think because you are not used to making the ice cream that you can not make this desert. It is very simple. For a frozen whipped cream desert a freezer is not necessary. Any two quart kettle will hold the ice and salt. Place several folds of newspaper directly inside the kettle to fill up space so that much ice or salt will be needed. When packed put the kettle away in the fireless cooker until time to serve.

Recipe No. 2.—You will have about two cupfuls of fruit syrup from your jar of peaches. Soak one and a half pounds powdered gelatin in a cupful of cold syrup for five minutes. Bring the rest of the syrup to a boil, sweeten if necessary and pour over the gelatin, stirring it until dissolved. Set in cool place to harden.

The peach gelatin may be served with whipped cream. Or before the gelatin hardens, you may whip into it the stiffly beaten white of an egg and make a thin custard from the yolk to serve as a sauce around the gelatin.

ECONOMIES.

The best way to keep the walls of the kitchen white and glossy is to wash their painted surface with bran water instead of soap. Boil one pint of bran in a gallon of water and keep for an hour. The paint will look better and keep clean longer when washed with this than when cleaned with soap and water.

People often spoil their walls by driving in nails haphazard, only to find the nails bent because they are being hammered against bricks. The right method is to pierce the wall with a darning needle to find the crevice between the bricks and then to drive in the nail.

When the stove pipes are put away to prevent rusting, take equal parts of coal oil and pure linseed oil, mix and with a soft piece of cloth rub thoroughly over the surface of the pipe. Stoves may be treated the same way. To preserve steel articles, paint over them with beeswax dissolved in benzole; the benzole rapidly evaporates, leaving the surface coated with a thin layer of wax. The solution evaporates rapidly, and must be kept tightly corked, pouring but a very little in a saucer at a time and working rapidly. No fire must be near it.

The most effectual remedy for slimy and greasy drain pipes is copras dissolved and left to work gradually through the pipes.

You can remove grease spots from wall paper with blotting paper and a hot flatiron. Put the blotting paper over the stain and press it with the hot iron.

If family silver is to be packed away for any length of time, it should be carefully cleaned, then lightly smeared over with fresh lard and put into flannel bags. When it is brought out a bath in hot water and silver soap makes it ready for immediate use.

Often in breaking an egg it opens unevenly, and the white adheres to the hands. To prevent this place the egg in the palm of the left hand, and with a sharp knife give a very quick tap at the center of the egg, which will open nicely.

SEVEN DEATHS RECORDED

Caused by Terrific Thunderstorm and Rain in England

A despatch from London, England, says: The exceptionally high temperature that has prevailed during the month of May culminated on Wednesday evening in a terrific thunderstorm in London and the southern and western suburbs. Many persons were killed by lightning, which also struck numerous churches and other buildings. An electric wire fused in the building of the Royal Exchange and started a fire, which, however, was speedily quenched. The storm was accompanied by a deluge of rain which caused a landslide on the Southeastern Railway near Merstham, blocking that line, and also flooded the Great Western Railway at Ealing, deranging traffic. The full fury of the storm was felt at Epsom shortly after the races had ended, and thousands of the spectators were drenched. Altogether seven deaths as the result of the storm have been recorded. Five of these—two policemen and three civilians—occurred in the neighborhood of Epsom Downs.

MUZZLE ALL DOGS.

Board of Health May Again Order That Canines be Chained.

A despatch from Toronto says: With the approach of the hot weather and the consequent danger of rabies in cases where people are bitten by dogs, it is very probable that the Provincial Board of Health will again order that all dogs in the province must be muzzled during the summer months. Already several cases of dog bites have been reported, and as there were so few cases reported last summer when all dogs were muzzled, it is expected that a similar order will be issued shortly. Orders already have been issued that all dogs in Scarborough Township must be kept "on chain" for ten days as a result of a bite inflicted by an animal on Gordon Henderson at Agincourt.

BEATEN BY BURGLARS.

Mysterious Outrage on a Minister and His Wife.

A despatch from Sherbrooke, Que., says: Desperadoes, believed to be the same men who attempted to rob the Eastern Townships Bank at Danville a few days ago, early on Monday morning broke into the house of Rev. Mr. Brewer, the Episcopal minister at Compton, attacking the minister and his wife and severely injuring them. The assailants then set the bed on fire and got away. The couple succeeded in getting the flames under control. Both were cut on the head by some blunt instrument, the injuries being inflicted while they were asleep. Not a trace of their assailants has been found, nor can any motive be found for the act.

Eva Nixon's Clothing Caught From Candles.

A despatch from Ottawa says: Eva Nixon, the five-year-old daughter of Robert Nixon, this city, died on Monday as a result of burns received at noon on Sunday while in St. Thomas' Roman Catholic church, Clarkstown, a suburb of Ottawa. The girl was visiting friends near the church, and with others entered the edifice to place some lighted candles before one of the altars. There was a row of lighted candles on the altar steps, and, passing too close to these, her clothing ignited. She rushed from the church to the street, but by the time she got outside her clothing was almost all burned off. The little one was rushed to an hospital, but the terrible burns proved fatal.

However, matters are made serious by all the linemen of the telephone and telegraph companies going out. The teamsters are still working and will not strike. The wires of the Street Railway Company were cut in the suburbs at 8 o'clock, but repaired by 8.30. The situation is serious, but not as bad as anticipated.

He was struck and hurled down an embankment, and was dead when the men picked him up.

TENDERS HAVE BEEN CALLED

Tenders for the remaining portion of the road will be called for early

C.N.R. COMPLETED PURCHASE

Nearly 8,000 Acres Bought on Mount Royal Island.

A despatch from Montreal says: It is stated that Canadian Northern interests on Thursday completed the last deal which places the company in possession of about 8,000 acres of land, stretching in unbroken continuity from the present scene of building operations in Outremont to the Back River, on both sides of Cartierville, and that this huge deal involves the disbursement of between $7,000,000 and $8,000,000. The land has been acquired primarily for the purpose of giving the Canadian Northern right of way across the island for its tracks, but it will ultimately mean the opening up of a huge district for building lots, and, in the opinion of real estate men, a highly profitable investment for the company.

Hogs—$6.50 per cwt. weighed off cars. A fair trade was done in sheep at prices ranging from $4 to $5, and Spring lambs at from $3 to $4.50 each. The demand for calves was good, and prices were steady at from $2 to $6 each, as to size and quality.
Toronto, June 6.—A few cattle for shipping were bought at as high as $6.10. Butcher cattle were active and firmer at $5.70 to $5.95. Cows were steady at $4.50 to $5.40; bulls, $4.40 to $5. ## BOOM IN OCEAN TRAFFIC

Eighty Liners Have Already Arrived in Montreal This Season

A despatch from Montreal says: Since navigation opened on the St. Lawrence River for the season of 1911 no less than eighty ocean-going vessels and upwards of 700 lake steamers, canal boats and barges, have used the harbor each for the embarking or discharging of passengers or general cargo. The total shipments carried away by vessels bound from Montreal to other ports has increased all round by at least 50 per cent. The eighty ocean-going steamers which have come up to Montreal within the past five weeks have brought to this country fully 55,000 passengers. Assuming that ten per cent. of this number represented returning Canadians, transient English visitors and Americans passing through, it is safe to say that the stream of new arrivals coming into the country via the St. Lawrence route has averaged 10,000 weekly. Last season the arrival in one week of 5,000 or 6,000 was considered excellent.

Strings of vessels coming down the canal from Fort William, Port Arthur and Kingston are filled up to the hatchways with grain and merchandise, while boats coming from Chicago have carried on a single trip as much as 125,000 bushels of grain. Cargoes of 50,000 and 75,000 bushels are of common occurrence.

THE BIRTHDAY GIFT.

"Bonnie"—whose other name was Phil Cameron—sat on a rock by the pond, studying hard what he could get for his mother's birthday present. He saved his pennies after October came to buy a large bottle of lavender-water for her Christmas, because she was fond of it, and he was, too. But her own birthday was coming, and what could he get that she really liked, when there were only seventeen cents in his iron bank? He never had to break open his banks to know how much they held, for he kept account of every cent in a funny little journal he had.

What was it he heard his mother saying to a neighbor last spring, out in the garden, about something she wanted more than anything else for the flower-beds, but she never could find it? Could he not find it if he hunted the waysides and edges of the woods and the meadow-banks, now it was vacation? Don Felton could go with him, for Don would never tell what they were after, and some of the

be late that day, when there was to be a very nice early dinner, such as the boy liked, and a walk to the watercress brooks after four o'clock when it grew cool. The watercress walks were always a treat, there were so many pleasant things to be seen in the two-mile stroll. The mother hurried to get her own work done in the forenoon, and went out to help in the last touches for dinner, when in came two rather grimy, dusty, but entirely joyous boys, and a dog looking as delighted as if he had planned the whole surprise. For Bonnie held out to his mother a superb plant of cardinal-flower, five feet high, the roots tied up with plenty of earth clinging to them, and a spike of the beautiful, jewel-red flowers in bloom, that seemed to light the whole place. It was the mother's favorite flower, and she had longed for a plant to set in her garden for years. The story all came out—how Bonnie had scoured the region four miles round to find a wild cardinal-plant, had marked the spot, and visited it week by week, watering it in a dry time, and this morning had dug the whole thing up and bore it triumphantly to his mother. This is a true story. The cardinal-flower was transplanted to his mother's garden on her birthday many, many years ago. She has had birthday presents and forgotten them; but every year that beauti-

Women of Vera Cruz Decorated His Quarters With Flowers.

A despatch from Vera Cruz says: With his quarters on the steamer Ypiranga half-filled with flowers contributed by the women of Vera Cruz, ex-President Diaz and his party sailed from this port on Wednesday afternoon for Spain. General Diaz made a farewell speech to the members of the guard who accompanied him from the Mexican capital to this port. No ceremony had been planned for the departure of General Diaz, and for the first time he left the dock without receiving the Presidential salute.

MANY FIRES IN MONTREAL.

Likely to Have More Than London, England, Says the Chief.

A despatch from Montreal says: Instead of holding its position as the city which has more fires for its size than any other in the world, Montreal is going ahead, and so far this year there have been an average of eight calls per day, where last year there were six. "It looks as though Montreal, with its 500,000 population, would have more fires this year than the City of London, England, with its seven or eight million," said Chief Tremblay on Wednesday afternoon. Already this year the Montreal firemen have answered 1,150 calls, 300 more than at this time last year.

DIED BY HIS OWN HAND.

KING NOT PRESENT AT BALL.

Death of Great-Uncle of Denmark Modifies Entertainments.

A despatch from London says: The death of King George's great-uncle, Prince John of Denmark, is causing modifications in some of the Coronation entertainments. The Duke of Devonshire's ball at Devonshire House on Wednesday night was one of the most brilliant functions of the season. It was to have been graced by the presence of King George and Queen Mary, but owing to the death of Prince John the King did not attend, and the Queen remained only for dinner, leaving before the dancing began. The Duke and Duchess of Connaught and several other members of the Royal Family attended the ball, however.

A SLOW GROWTH.

Scotland Has Increased Only 287,000 in Past Decade.

A despatch from London says: Scotland has a population of 4,759,445, according to the provisional figures of the census made public on Thursday. This is an increase over the 1901 census of 287,342, and is the smallest increase in any census since 1861.

never could find it. Could he not find it if he hunted the waysides and edges of the woods and the meadow-banks, now it was vacation! Don Felton could go with him, for Don would never tell what they were after, and some of the other boys might spoil his plan if they knew it.

He would take the dog along, for Prince just loved going off with the two boys, and he never told secrets.

So there were long days in vacation when nothing was seen of the boy after breakfast until he came home late in the afternoon, very hungry, quite tired, very dusty and very cheerful. He said he had been off to Green Lodge with Don Felton, and as Green Lodge was a favorite tramp with the boys, winter and summer, no more questions were asked.

Two or three times that month the boy was off on a long expedition, but the mother always had a luncheon for him to take along, done up in paper and slung by a strap over one shoulder, with a drinking-cup tied on. Bonnie thought his mother was the right sort—just what a boy wanted. As for putting up lunches of salad rolls and sweet pickles and plum gingerbread and cookies, there was not a mother in town who thought of any such thing for a boy's tramp. Oh, his mother was worth a birthday present, if he had to walk his shoes out for it!

When the birthday came, Bonnie, Don and the dog were gone before the mother finished her breakfast. She wondered if he was going to triumphantly to his mother. This is a true story. The cardinal-flower was transplanted to his mother's garden on her birthday many, many years ago. She has had birthday presents and forgotten them; but every year that beautiful jewel-flower blooms for her again, and she thinks of the two eager, dusty little boys who tugged it home for her over miles of hot country road.—Youth's Companion.

WIFE SLAIN BY HUSBAND.

New Westminster Man Put Three Bullets Into Her Head.

A despatch from New Westminster, B. C., says: Henry Jobes, machinist's helper, 427 Fourth Street, murdered his wife early on Saturday morning. The murder was discovered by his son, William Jobes, who, when he went to work in the morning, heard his father had bought a revolver the previous day. He immediately hurried home. Entering the house, William at once proceeded to the kitchen and found his mother lying dead on the floor with three bullet wounds in her head.

$3,600 in Cash Prizes for Farmers

READ the conditions of the Prize Contest we are conducting for the farmers of Canada. $400.00 in prizes will be awarded to each Province. These prizes will be divided into four groups, consisting of:

PRIZE "A"—$100.00 to be given to the farmer in each Province who will use during 1911 the greatest number of barrels of "CANADA" Cement. PRIZE "B"—$100.00 to be given to the farmer in each Province who uses "CANADA" Cement for the greatest number of purposes. PRIZE "C"—$100.00 to be given to the farmer in each Province who furnishes us with the photograph showing the best of any kind of work done on his farm during 1911 with "CANADA" Cement. PRIZE "D"—$100.00 to be given to the farmer in each Province who submits the best and most complete description of how any particular piece of work (shown by photograph sent in) was done.

Every farmer in Canada is eligible. Therefore, do not be deterred from entering by any feeling that you would have little chance against your neighbor. For remember, Prizes "C" and "D" have no bearing whatever upon the quantity of cement used.

As a matter of fact, your success in this contest will depend to a great extent on your careful reading of our 160-page book, "What the Farmer Can Do With Concrete." In this book—sent free on request to any farmer, full instructions are given as to the uses of concrete, and plans for every kind of farm buildings and farm utility. You'll see the need of this book, whether you are going to try for a prize or not. If you have not got your copy yet, write for it to-night. ## Children Cry FOR FLETCHER'S CASTORIA

The Mystic Seven.

A certain fond father sent his son to the University of Pennsylvania last fall. As a farewell piece of advice he told the young man that "his success was almost assured, since both the word success and your name contain seven letters." The midyear examinations, however, proved to be his doom, and he was compelled to return home. "Well," said his father, "didn't you keep in mind what I told you about the seven letters?"

"I did that, father," answered the boy, "but you must remember that there are also seven letters in failure." —Philadelphia Times.

The Age of Linen.

It is highly probable that the manufacture of linens is of greater antiquity than that of silk. Archaeologists generally admit that the mummy cloth of the most ancient dynasties was a variety of finest linen. The Egyptian and Jewish priests wore it at all their ceremonies. We find mention of fine linens all through the Old and New Testaments. When the queen of Sheba visited Solomon she was habited in linen. In Revelation the angels are clothed in "pure and white linen." Genesis tells us that Pharaoh arrayed Joseph in vestures of fine linen. Silk is mentioned in the Bible only four times.

Tyranny.

There are few minds to which tyranny is not delightful. Power is nothing but as it is felt, and the delight of superiority is proportionate to the resistance overcome.—Johnson.

Every production of genius must be the production of enthusiasm.—Disraeli.

WHY OATMEAL VARIES

Only One-Third of the Oats Are Fit

To make a really delicious oatmeal, one must use just the plump, rich grains. Common oatmeal, made of oats as they run, lacks flavor and richness. And it lacks, above all, that wealth of energy element which makes one "feel his oats."

Thousands of people eat oatmeal without ever knowing what a vim-producing food it is. They never know how enticing it can be. They buy oats in bulk without even a brand on them to guarantee the grade they get.

The choicest oats are sifted 62 times in getting the grains used for Quaker Oats. Only ten pounds in a bushel—the choicest third of the finest oats—is good enough for Quaker.

The Quaker process makes these grains into an oat food worth having. One who once eats it will never again care for a common oatmeal.

Oats are the vim-producing food. But they who get the utmost effects are the eaters of Quaker Oats.

Made in Canada.

A steam vessel shall be provided with an efficient whistle or siren, sounded by steam or some substitute for steam, so placed that the sound may not be intercepted by any obstruction, and with an efficient fog-horn, to be sounded by mechanical means, and also with an efficient bell. A sailing vessel of 20 tons gross tonnage or upwards shall be provided with a similar fog-horn and bell.
